INDUSTRY AND CAPITAL.

Third Annual Report of Commissioner David A. Wells.

Comprehensive Survey of the Resources of the Country.

The Elements of National Wealth and Prosperity.

The Defects of the Present Tariff and Their Remedy.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SPECIAL COMMISSIONER OF THE REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY, 1869.

SIR: I propose in this my third annual report, which I have the honor herewith to present, to ask through you the attention of Congress to the results of a somewhat extended investigation, instituted with a view not of establishing or confirming any particular theory, but rather of determining, through the collection of positive data, what policy in legislation is likely to prove hereafter more advantageous to the revenue, and most certain to establish the wealth and industry of the whole country upon a sound and substantial basis. As all reasoning in regard to the future must necessarily be predicated upon the experience of the past or present, it is obvious that the first step or starting point of this inquiry is involved in the determination of the question as to what is the present condition of the capital and industry of the country.

The facts which constitute an answer to this question are to a considerable degree contradictory and paradoxical. On the other hand there is much that indicates that the country is rapidly recovering from the effects of the war, and resuming that wonderful career of progress and development which especially characterized its history during the period embraced in the thirteen years from 1847 to 1860. On the other hand there is another class of facts which as unmistakably indicate the existence of agencies which tend to arrest or obstruct national development, and which foster speculation, idleness, extravagance of living, discontent with moderate and slow gains, hasty to be rich, and the spirit of trading as distinguished from the spirit of production.

It is proposed, in the first instance, to briefly state the evidence in support of the first proposition; and although this evidence has been presented in great part already by the Commissioner in his two previous reports, yet a recapitulation of the leading elements of national wealth, on which rest the elements of national credit, can never be considered as untimely so long as a distrust of the resources of the nation is for any purpose fostered and encouraged—particularly by persons holding official or other public positions. This evidence may be grouped as follows:

FIRST, IMMIGRATION.—From the 1st of July, 1865, to the 1st of December, 1868, about 1,000,000 natives of foreign countries have sought a permanent home in the United States. Investigations, made some years ago, (since when the character of the immigration has greatly improved,) showed that these immigrants bring with them specie or its equivalent to the average amount of $80 per head; while their average value to the country as producers cannot be estimated at less than half the average value of an ordinary laborer in the South prior to the war, viz: $1,000 each. Immigration, then, since the termination of the war, may be regarded as having added $80,000,000 directly, and $500,000,000 indirectly, to the wealth and resources of the country.

SECONDLY, A GENERAL INCREASE IN THE PRODUCTS OF DOMESTIC INDUSTRY.—The Commissioner is fully aware of the difficulties attendant upon the determination of estimates in this Department; prices, with the present irredeemable, fluctuating currency being wholly valueless as a measure; while a statement of quantities, to be strictly accurate, must be considered not only with reference to quality, but also to the normal increase in production, which under all circumstances accompanies an increase of population. Nevertheless, the wealth of the country is its capacity for annual production; and an analysis of this production is the surest, and at present the only, available method of testing that wealth.

Speaking generally, however, in the first instance, the Commissioner asserts that all the available data tend to establish the following conclusions, viz.: That within the last five years more cotton spindles have been put in operation, more iron furnaces erected, more iron smelted, more bars rolled, more steel made, more coal and copper mined, more lumber sawed and hewn, more houses and shops constructed, more manufactories of different kinds started, and more petroleum collected, refined and exported, than during any equal period in the history of the country; and that this increase has been greater both as regards quality and quantity, and greater than the legitimate increase to be expected from the normal increase of wealth and population. To support this general statement, the following specific evidence may be adduced:

1. Cotton Manufacture.—The number of cotton spindles in the United States, according to the census of 1860, was 5,235,777. From 1860 to 1864 there was little or no increase of cotton machinery, but possibly a diminution—many mills, under the great demand for army clothing, having been converted into establishments for the manufacture of woolens. The number of spindles, however, at present in operation, as shown by the recent returns of the American Cotton Manufacturers and Planters' Association to be about 7,000,000, a gain of 31.78 per cent. in from four to five years, and mainly since the termination of the war in 1865. An estimate, based on less perfect data, given in the last annual report of the Commissioner, fixed this increase at only from 15 to 20 per cent.

2. Woolen Manufacture.—Imperfect statistics, collected by the Northwestern Woolen Manufacturers' Association, show an increase in the woolen manufacture in seven States of the West, viz.: Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota, to have been, since 1860, as follows:

	No. of establishments.	Capital invested.	Sets of machinery.
1860	259	$1,616,740	294
1868	557	4,482,000	995

3. Pig Iron Productions.—In the department of iron industry the Commissioner would again call attention to the fact stated in his previous report, that the recent average annual increase in the production of pig iron is remarkably uniform and greatly in excess of the ratio of increase of population; the latter, at the present time, being assumed at about the ratio of increase from 1850 to 1860, viz.: 3½ per cent., while the annual increase in the product of pig iron, during the last five years, has been as follows:

Annual product of Pig-iron from 1863 to 1868.

	Tons.	Annual increase.
1863	947,604
1864	1,135,497	19.82 per cent.
1865	1,347,143	18.62 per cent.
1867	1,447,771	7.16 per cent.
1868, (estimated)	1,550,000	7.06 per cent.

For the seven years from 1860 (when the production was 918,770 tons) to 1867, the average annual increase has been 3.35 per cent.

This increase is in excess of the present average annual increase of the pig-iron product of Great Britain, which since 1863 has been as follows:

	Tons.	Increase.
1863	4,510,040
1864
1865
1866
1867

decline of 110,300 tons.

[illegible] the official returns of the iron trade [illegible] diminution of 49 per cent. in 1868, as compared with 1860; and of 50 per cent. as compared [illegible]

Copper.—The product of the copper mines of [illegible] superior from 1860 to 1867, inclusive, is [illegible] as follows:

	Tons.		Tons.
1860	6,000	1864	8,000
1861	7,400	1865	10,000
1862	9,063	1866	10,000
1863	8,648	1867	11,000

In the same period the copper product of [illegible] Britain largely declined, viz.: from 15,000 [illegible] to 11,153 tons in 1866, and 10,800 tons in [illegible]

[illegible] increased to an average of about 20,000 [illegible] in 1867 the export was 07,000 [illegible] for 1868 the export to Dec. 18 is reported [illegible] 31 gallons.

6. Coal.—[illegible] increase in the production of [illegible] which may be taken as a measure of this [illegible] of American coal, is reported as follows: [illegible] 450 tons; 1866, 12,379,499 tons; [illegible] 1 tons; 1868, to Dec. 12, 13,500,000 tons. [illegible] near the supply of anthracite coal [illegible] affected by strikes and constant [illegible] while other fuels, otherwise there is no cause [illegible] the aggregate product mined would [illegible] a much larger increase than has been [illegible] But as the case stands the increase which [illegible] has certainly taken place proves that the conditions [illegible] to consume—which conditions are mainly [illegible] have not been impaired, but have increased during the past year in about a three-fold ratio to the estimated increase of population.

7. Lake Tonnage.—The following table prepared for the Chicago Board of Trade, shows the recent increase of tonnage upon the northern lakes, (exclusive of canal boats,) for the years ending March 31, 1864, 1866 and 1867:

	Vessels.	Tonnage.	Increase.
1864	648	209,304
1866	997	251,077	24 per cent.
1867	1,196	279,981	11 per cent.

8. Consumption of Sugar and Coffee.—In Europe some measure of the prosperity of the people can, it is believed, be obtained by noticing the rise or fall in the consumption of certain articles which cannot be considered as belonging wholly to the catalogue of necessities, such as sugars, tea, coffee, &c. Making use of this standard, the following results are obtained:

The average monthly consumption of imported sugars for the seven months ending Nov. 30, 1868, as indicated by the distribution from the five principal Atlantic ports, was 82,149,760 pounds, as compared with 70,088,480 pounds for the corresponding period of 1867, and 68,296,609 pounds for that of 1865; while the average monthly consumption of coffee for 1865, deduced from the same data, has been 8,394 tons, as compared with 7,589 tons in 1867, and 5,999 tons in 1866.

THIRDLY, THE CONTINUED INCREASE IN THE AGRICULTURAL PRODUCT OF THE UNITED STATES, WHETHER MEASURED BY QUANTITY OR VALUE.—The aggregate crops of the Northern States for 1867 were believed to be greater than those of any previous year, while the crops for the past year are known to exceed in quantity and quality those of 1867.

As specific evidence, a few statistics are presented which have recently been published on what seems reliable authority.

In the State of Ohio the recent increase of sheep, hogs, and cereals, is reported as follows:

Number of sheep in 1865	6,305,796
Number of sheep in 1868	7,580,000

In the eight years last past the sheep of Ohio are reported as having more than doubled.

Number of hogs in 1865	1,400,000
Number of hogs in 1868	2,100,000

Cereal crops, including wheat, corn and oats:

	Bushels.
1865	102,414,278
1866	118,061,911
1868	141,000,000

The commercial return of the number of hogs packed at the West since the season of 1864–65 is as follows:

1865–66	1,705,955
1866–67	2,490,791
1867–68	2,781,084

This latter number was, however, exceeded in the first three years of the war.

The present ratio of the increase of the crop of Indian corn for the whole country is put by the best authorities at an average of three and one-half per cent. per annum. The crop of 1859 was returned by the census at 830,451,707 bushels, and adopting the above ratio of increase, the crop of 1868, acknowledged to be a full one, must be estimated at 1,100,000,000 bushels, and if sold at the assumed low average of 45 cents per bushel, would net over $500,000,000.

As respects the agricultural product of the Southern States, the returns collected by the association of cotton manufacturers and planters before referred to, show that the crop of 1867–8 was at least 2,500,000 bales, or about 65 per cent. of the average crop for the five years immediately preceding the war; while for the year 1868–9 the estimates are generally in favor of 2,700,000 bales. The results of the two crops upon the interests of the South will, however, be materially different. During the crop year 1867–8 the South did not raise food sufficient for its own subsistence, and a large part of the proceeds of the cotton of that year were used for the purchase of food, and also to repay advances for the previous purchase of stock and implements. This year, 1868–9, the South has raised food in excess of its necessities, and the proceeds of nearly the entire crop may be considered in the light of a surplus for future development.

The following are the estimated cotton crops of the United States since the termination of the war: 1865–66, 2,154,476 bales; 1866–67, 2,938,998 bales; 1867–68, 2,498,895 bales; 1868–69, estimated, 2,700,000 bales.

The culture of rice at the South, which at the termination of the war practically amounted to nothing, has also so far been restored that the yield of the present year is estimated at 70,000 tierces; an amount probably sufficient for home consumption, and giving certain promise of a speedy renewal of the former extensive exports of this article.

The following is an estimate of the tobacco crops of the United States since 1850, prepared by a committee of the trade for the use of the Committee of Ways and Means, at the first session of the fortieth Congress:

	Pounds.		Pounds.
1850	201,250,663	1865	183,316,953
1863	267,353,082	1866	325,000,000
1864	177,450,229	1867	250,000,000

Fourthly, Railway Extension and Movement.—The total number of miles of railroads in the United States at the close of 1835 was 1,098; at the close of 1867, 39,244; giving an average increase of 1,166 for each year of the intervening period. The annual progress of railroad extension during and subsequent to the war is shown by the following table:

	Miles.		Miles.
1860	1,846	1865	1,277
1861	631	1866	1,832
1863	864	1867	2,227
1863	1,050	1868 (estimated)	3,500
1864	738

It will thus be seen that since and including the year 1865, the year of the termination of the war, nearly 8,000 miles of railroad have been constructed in the United States, and that the present ratio of increase is more than double the average of railroad history prior to 1860, (viz.: 1,156 miles.)

On the other hand, the average annual increase of railroads in Great Britain from 1860 to 1865 was only 571 miles, and in France during the same period 509 miles.

An analysis of the railway system of the United States, which has been made for the first time during the past year, presents us, however, with results which, before they not founded on incontrovertible data, would seem fabulous. Thus the ratio of the gross earnings to cost of the railroads of the whole country for the year 1867 was equal to about 21 per cent.; for the Northern States, about 23 per cent. The railroads of the country, therefore, now receive their cost in a little more than four years, and this ratio of gross earnings to cost is steadily increasing with the increase of the railway system and traffic of the country.

Again, "the average number of tons of freight carried upon the railroads of the country is estimated at 1,000 tons per mile of road. The tonnage of the railroads of seven States in 1867, averaged 3,812 tons per mile; that of the railroads of New-York 3,100 tons; and that of Pennsylvania 6,000 tons. The gross tonnage of the 39,284 miles of railroad in existence at the close of 1867, as the above estimate, was equal to commercial tonnage of 38,568,000, and if we deduct from this amount 15,000,000 tons for coal and other ores, material, and an equal amount for duplications of the same tonnage on different roads, there will be left 48,488,000 tons of merchandise moved annually upon all the railways of the United States. At an estimated value of $150 per ton for this tonnage, the total annual value of the merchandise traffic of all the roads at present equals $7,273,200,000."

The total amount of tonnage transported on all the roads of the country for the year 1851, is estimated by good authorities at not exceeding 10,000,000 tons. If from this we deduct 3,000,000 tons for coal and other cheap materials, and 1,000,000 tons for duplications, there will be left a merchandise tonnage of 6,000,000 tons in 1851, against 48,488,000 tons in 1867. The rate of increase in this period, therefore, has been equal to 800 per cent., and the actual increase 42,488,000 tons. At the estimated value of $150 per ton, the increase in the value of the railway merchandise of the country in sixteen years has been $6,373,200,000, or at the rate of nearly $400,000,000 per annum. And it should also be noted that one-half of this increase has taken place "in the seven years that have elapsed since 1860."

The increased movement on the railways of the United States, which in the main represents increased product, also affords some indication of the progress of the development of the country. Thus, the earnings of the ten principal railway lines of the West exhibit for the first ten months of 1868 (with a decrease rather than an increase of freight rates) a gain of eight per cent. as compared with the earnings of the corresponding months for the year 1867. The increased movement on the railways and canals of the State of New-York, which are known to be the most accessible, as a measure of production for the whole country, we find that the total annual tonnage increased from 7,102,621 tons in 1858, to 16,062,006 in 1865, an increase of 154 per cent., while the annual value of the tonnage thus moved increased from $426,816,500 in 1858, to $1,728,320,207 in 1867, a gain of 264 per cent.

An examination of the railroad statistics of the whole country for the above period further indicates that during the ten years above referred to, or since 1858, the increase of tonnage moved on the railways of the United States has been at a rate seven times greater than the ratio of the increase of population.

Telegraphic Extension.—The recent extension of the telegraphic system of the United States is reported [illegible] annually as follows:

[illegible] miles of wire	2,000
[illegible] miles of wire	3,000
[illegible] of wire	6,000

REDUCTION OF STATE DEBTS.

As affording some further indication of the material prosperity of the country, the Commissioner, as in his former report, would here call attention to the progress which has been made during the past year in the reduction of the indebtedness of the several States, incurred in great part by reason of the war. Texas, for example, the reduction of the debt of the State of New-Hampshire for the year 1868 was 6.9 per cent.; of Vermont, 16.1 per cent.; as against 7.7 per cent. in 1867; of Rhode Island, 13.7 per cent.; Connecticut, 8.4 per cent.; Kentucky, 21 per cent.; Ohio, 4.5 per cent.; Michigan, 6.4 per cent., and Indiana, 23 per cent. During the years 1867 and 1868 the State of Illinois reduced her debt 30.5 per cent.; while New-York, which has comparatively the largest State indebtedness, reduced her debt during the past year to the extent of about 10 per cent., as compared with a reduction of 6.7 per cent. for the year 1867. West Virginia, Kentucky, Iowa, Wisconsin, Nebraska and Minnesota have at the present time practically no indebtedness. For further information on the present condition of State indebtedness, reference is made to the appendix of this report, marked C.

AGENCIES CONCERNED IN NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT.

One subject at this point of our inquiry is well worthy of attention. It is this: To what agencies are our seemingly fabulous national development to be attributed, and to what extent especially is it to be referred to positive legislation?

In answer to this it is to be said that all investigation clearly shows that these agencies have been mainly two, viz.: first, great natural resources in respect to abundant and fertile territory, great natural facilities for intercommunication, abundant and cheap raw material, and diversity without inhabitivity of climate; and secondly, a form and spirit of Government which heretofore has left man and capital, over an area almost continental, free and unrestrained to work out their own development. Since 1840, especially, other agencies have come in as powerful adjuncts, viz.: a continued influx of population and capital from the Old World; a continued invention and application of labor-saving machinery, and a most rapid extension of the railway system; which last, by giving a market to all the products of our national domain, has greatly stimulated the spirit of industry and enterprise. With these, also, should undoubtedly be included the purchase of California and the discovery of gold on the Pacific.

As respects the relation of legislation by the National Government to the results under consideration, if we except the adoption of a liberal policy in the disposition of the public lands, it is difficult, at least for the period which elapsed between 1840 and 1860, to affirm much that is positive, unless, in conformity with the maxim, that that Government is best which governs least, absence of legislation is to be regarded in the light of a positive good. If important results followed the acquisition of California, such results were certainly neither foreseen nor anticipated; while as regards commercial legislation, a review of all the facts cannot fail to suggest a doubt whether the evils which have resulted from instability have not far more than counterbalanced any advantages that may have proceeded from the experience of a fluctuating policy.

The Commissioner is well aware that this opinion will not be readily accepted by those who have been educated to believe that the industrial and commercial prosperity of the country was seriously affected by the legislation which took place during the years elapsed between 1843 to 1846. But upon this point all investigation shows that the facts are widely contrary to what may be regarded as the popular belief, which, indeed, in this particular, would appear to be based on little else than mere assertions, which, remaining for a long time unquestioned, have at last acquired, by force of repeated historical truth. Thus, for example, it has been constantly asserted, both in Congress and out of Congress, that the production of pig iron was remarkably stimulated under the tariff of 1842—rising from 220,000 tons in 1842 to 800,000 tons in 1848—and that under the tariff of 1846 the same industry was remarkably depressed. Now, these assertions may be correct, but the most reliable statistics to which we have access, viz: those gathered by the American Iron Association, instruct us as follows:

Production of pig iron in 1830, 165,000 tons; in 1840, 347,000 tons. Increase in 10 years, 110 per cent.

Production in 1845, 486,000 tons; increase in 5 years, 40 per cent.

Production in 1850, 564,000 tons; increase in 10 years, 62 per cent.

Production in 1855, 754,000 tons; increase in 5 years, 33 per cent.

Production in 1860, 913,000 tons; increase in 10 years, 61 per cent.

It thus appears that the great annual increase in the production of pig iron took place prior to the year 1840, and for 20 years was remarkably uniform at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and that since then, no matter what has been the character of legislation, whether the tariff was for or against, whether the condition of the country was one of war or peace, the increase of the production has been at the average of about 8 per cent. per annum, or more than double the ratio of the increase of population.

Again, as another curious illustration of the apparent misconception of the effects of past legislation upon the development of the country, take the following paragraph from the recent report of a Congressional committee:

"No business man of mature age need be reminded of the revulsion which followed in consequence of the free trade system of 1846—the influx of foreign goods, immigration, of wages, of public or private revenue, until the culmination of the system in the tariff of 1857, with the memorable crash of that period; the general ruin of manufacturers and merchants; the suspended payments of the banks; the reduction of the Treasury to the verge of bankruptcy, and the unparalleled distress among the unemployed poor."

Now, with all due deference to the Committee, the Commissioner would ask attention to the following statistics bearing on the question under consideration:

Increase in the production of pig iron: In 1840, 347,000 tons; in 1845, 486,000; in 1850, 564,755; in 1855, 754,178; 1860, 913,770.

Increase in the production of Pennsylvania anthracite coal: 1842, 1,108,418 tons; 1846, 2,344,006; 1847, 2,882,309; 1849, 3,217,641; 1855, 6,486,097; 1860, 8,143,938.

Increase in ship-building: 1842, 129,084 tons; 1845, 146,018; 1850, 272,219; 1855, 583,450.

Annual increase of railroad construction: 1842, 491 miles; 1845, 956; 1847, 669; 1849, 1,969; 1853, 3,452; 1856, 3,643 miles.

In short, there does not seem to be any reliable evidence which can be adduced to show that the change which took place in the legislative commercial policy of the country in 1846 had any permanent or marked effect whatever; while, on the other hand, the study of all the facts pertaining to national development from 1840 to 1860, and from 1865 to the present time, unmistakably teaches this lesson; that the progress of the country through what we may term the strength of its elements of vitality is independent of legislation and even of the impoverishment and waste of a great war. Like one of our own mighty rivers, its movement is beyond control. Successive years, like successive affluents, only add to and increase its volume; while legislative enactments and conflicting commercial policies, like the construction of piers and the deposit of sunken wrecks, simply affect the current or constitute temporary obstructions. In fact, if the nation has not yet been lifted to the full comprehension of its own work, it builds determinately, as it were, by instinct.

Increase in the domestic consumption of cotton, north of the Potomac: 1840, 207,000 bales; 1845, 422,000; 1849–50, 476,000; 1851–52, 588,000; 1855, 638,900; 1858–59, 760,000; 1859–'60, 792,000.

Increase in immigration: 1840, 84,000; 1845, 174,000; 1850, 310,000; 1854, 427,000.

Increase in public revenue: 1840, $19,000,000; 1845, $29,000,000; 1850, $52,000,000; 1855, $74,000,000.

Increase of national wealth: From 1840 to 1850, 80 per cent.; from 1850 to 1860, 126 per cent. In 1854 the six per cent. bonds of the United States, issued in 1848, commanded a premium of 21 per cent.

Commercial tonnage of the United States: In 1840, 2,180,000; 1850, 3,535,000; 1860, 5,353,000.

Exports and imports: In 1840, $239,000,000; 1845, $231,000,000; 1850, $330,000,000; 1855, $536,000,000; 1860, $762,000,000.

EFFECT OF THE WAR IN CHECKING NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT.

What would have been the condition of progress during the decade from 1860 to 1870 had not the war intervened, is a question that cannot be definitely answered; but that many branches of production would have experienced a development limited only by the amount of available capital and skilled labor, cannot be doubted. Investigation shows that in many departments of industry the cost of skilled labor and of raw material in Great Britain and the United States, respectively, increased in 1860; while the advantage in the cost of food of domestic production, and of certain articles of import, such as sugars, teas and coffee, was largely in favor of this country. In 1860 American coarse cottons were obtaining the command in most extra-European markets. In 1860, wooden ships, plowing for profit, could be built cheaper in the United States than in any other country, although it is a noticeable fact that, probably from an inability to supply the demand for iron vessels, the decline of the shipbuilding interest in the United States, so much complained of of late, really began several years before the breaking out of the war.

In 1860 copper in the pig was exported from the United States in profitable competition with the mines of Cuba and of South America; and evidence has also been presented to the Commissioner showing that in some instances pig iron was manufactured with profit at rates far lower than the average of Europe, while the purchasing power of the wages paid for the same was considerably greater than at present.

But the war came, bringing with it certain inevitable results, and these results now constitute the per contra upon the national ledger before referred to. The features about them when, in contrast with the fact above cited, seems contradictory and paradoxical, is that while our resources as a nation have, on the whole, continued unimpaired, while we continue to possess and enjoy the greatest area of fertile territory, the most unrivaled means of intercommunication, natural or artificial, and the freest and most popular form of government; while the aggregate annual products of the soil have continually increased and not diminished, and those of the anvil, the forge, the loom and the spindle have also multiplied; there is, nevertheless, hardly a single domestic article or product, agricultural or manufactured, in behalf of which the claim, either directly or indirectly, has not been made within the last two years that the same could be produced to greater advantage or profit to the same other country than the United States; increased protection even being demanded for oil-paintings, rough building stone, Indian corn, firewood, Bibles and ice—the last to the extent of 15 per cent., gold; and this claim the Commissioner is obliged to admit is, to a very great extent, in exact accordance with the truth.

The United States finds itself, therefore, in the anomalous position of a great nation, favored in many respects as no other nation upon which the sun shines, unable to exchange its products on terms of equality with the products of any other country; the marked exception being always its product or supplies of the precious metals. Inquiry is now to be made into the causes to which these results must be attributed, and as to the measures which seem likely to prove remedial, avoiding, in so doing, to the greatest extent possible, any repetition of the facts and arguments which have been presented by the Commissioner in his former reports, or by others who have discussed this subject, and aiming to present rather the results of a continued investigation and of an enlarged experience.

AGENCIES ADVERSE TO NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT.

The immediate cause of the anomalous condition of affairs in question must unquestionably be referred to the greatly increased cost of nearly all forms of labor and commodities as compared with the price for the same that prevailed in the decade immediately preceding the war; while these, in turn must be regarded as the result mainly of three agencies growing out of the war, viz.: irredeemable paper currency, unequal and heavy taxation, and a limited supply of skilled labor, the last manifesting itself at the present time in specialties rather than in general.

INFLUENCE OF IRREDEEMABLE PAPER CURRENCY.

As the specific influence of the first agency has been of late so often and so thoroughly discussed, the Commissioner will only ask attention, under this head, to a few points of presumed novelty or interest; and, first, to a specific statement of actual experience, illustrative of the manner in which an irredeemable paper currency, or what is the same thing, a national abnegation of specie payments, unavoidably tends to destroy all profitable commercial relations with foreign countries to which trade in industry is conducted on a specie basis. The statement is furnished to the Commissioner by a manufacturer of furniture in one of the Middle States, who, previous to the war had built up an extensive export business to the West Indies, Central and South America, of a variety of "low-priced" and "sane-backed" furniture suited to warm latitudes.

Thus on the 1st of March, 1861, gold and currency being at par, $1,000 in gold possessed a purchasing power sufficient to obtain for the South American importer 111 1-9 dozen of what are termed in the trade "ordinary square-post cane-seat chairs." About the 1st of January, 1862, gold began to command a premium, and advanced during the next three years with great rapidity. This movement was not, however, participated in at first to any considerable extent, by either labor or commodities, and in consequence the purchasing power of gold greatly increased; so much so that on the 1st of July, 1864, the $1,000 gold which in 1861 bought 111 1-9 dozen chairs, then brought 143 dozen. Under these circumstances, as was to be expected, trade increased, as the foreign purchaser found the American market by far the best for his interest; but from July, 1864, a movement in the direction of the opposite extreme took place, gold receding and labor and commodities advancing in very unequal ratios. Thus in January, 1865, the $1,000 gold, which four years previous had a purchasing power of 111 1-9 dozen chairs, and on the 1st of July, 1864, of 143 dozen, then commanded but 125¾ dozen; in February, 1866, a still smaller number, viz.: 111¼ dozen, and ultimately attained its minimum in January, 1867, when the purchasing power of the sum named was only 89¾ dozen. From this point the purchasing power has gradually increased, and for the past year, 1868, has remained at the rate of about 100 dozen, or nine dozen less than could be bought with the same money in 1861.

The result has been that the foreign purchaser now goes to France or Germany; while the products of American industry, in the form of furniture, being no longer available to exchange for sugars, spices and goods, gold has necessarily been unbalanced; and, to use the words of the manufacturer describing his condition, "unless there is a speedy return to specie payments, custom will soon so fix the channels and currents of trade that any attempt on my part to divert them will be attended with great difficulty;" and what has thus been shown to be the case in the export trade of furniture to the United States in furniture, may be accepted as true of almost every other manufactured product, which, as a nation, we were accustomed, before the war, to exchange for foreign commodities.

COMPARISON OF PRICES OF LABOR AND COMMODITIES, 1860–61 AND 1867–68.

The present abnormal condition and the recent fluctuations in the prices of labor and commodities also properly come up for consideration in connection with the subject of an irredeemable paper currency—the chief agency to which the disturbances in question must be referred.

The investigations previously instituted by the Commissioner have established the fact, that up to the commencement of the year 1867, the general effect of the agencies growing out of the war had been to occasion an average advance in the price of commodities to the extent of about 90 per cent., while the corresponding average advance in wages was not in excess of 60 per cent.

He has now to ask attention to the conclusions which another year's experience and investigation have brought to us in relation to this subject. The tests of the truth or fallacy of these conclusions are to be found in the retail prices of the leading articles of domestic consumption by operatives in the manufacturing towns of New-England, the Middle and some of the Western States, have afforded data for accurately estimating the increase in the prices of such articles in 1867 as compared with 1860–61. They establish the following conclusions:

That the average increase in the price of groceries and provisions in 1867, as compared with 1860–61, was 88 per cent.; or, calculated on the basis of the quantities consumed on an average by a number of workmen, a little in excess of 86 per cent.; of domestic dry goods, including clothing, 86¾ per cent.; of fuel, 57 per cent.; of house-rent, 65 per cent. This latter average is, however, largely affected by the circumstance that in New-England, where manufacturing companies or corporations very generally own the tenements occupied by their operatives, rents have not been advanced to any considerable extent. Excluding New-England from the calculation, the average advance in rents for 1867, as compared with 1860–61, must be estimated at a much higher figure. Thus in the smaller manufacturing towns of Pennsylvania the average increase in the rents of houses occupied by operatives is believed to have been about 81 per cent., and in New-Jersey 111 per cent. In the cities of New-York, Philadelphia, Newark and Pittsburg, the increase has been from 90 to 100 per cent.

The average of these results, proportioned to the ascertained varying ratio of expenditure under the several heads, shows that for the year 1867, and for the first half of the year 1868, the increase in the price of all the elements which constitute the food, clothing and shelter of a family has been about 79 per cent., as compared with the standard prices of 1860–61.

The result, in general, of this large increase in the prices of commodities of domestic consumption to the laboring man becomes evident, by comparing such increase with the increase in the rates of wages during the period under comparison—which rates, for the year 1867 as compared with 1860–61, were as follows: For unskilled mechanical labor, 50 per cent.; for skilled mechanical labor, 60 per cent.

In the case of unmarried men, the comparison is more favorable than as respects men with families, the average increase in the prices of the articles consumed by them having been only about 72 per cent.; as, for example, board in manufacturing towns, 71 per cent.; clothing, irrespective of domestic dry goods, 75 per cent.; ordinary boots and shoes, 50 per cent. Skilled workmen, who are at the same time unmarried, and who are in the receipt of wages from 65 to 70 per cent. in advance of the rates paid in 1860, find their condition, as regards net income, approximately the same as before the war.

The returns to numerous and careful inquiries, instituted at the request of the Commissioner, by proprietors or agents of manufacturing establishments in the New-England, Middle, and some of the Western States, also afford much interesting information relative to the average weekly earnings and expenditures of American operatives, grouped as families, in the years 1860 and 1867; and also to the comparative proportion of time employed by such families at the two periods referred to, for the realization of a surplus over and above the expenditures absolutely necessary for shelter and subsistence.

The following table, based on indisputable and actual data, shows the average aggregate weekly earnings in 1867 of families of various sizes, in different sections of the country—one or more members of each of which were employed in some branch of manufacturing industry—their average weekly expenditures for provisions, fuel, house rent, &c., and the balance remaining to them, of and above such expenditure, available either for accumulation and capital, or for the purchase of clothing, or articles of enjoyment and luxury.

Average aggregate weekly earnings in 1867 of families.

Size of families.	Average weekly rent, clothing, &c.	Average weekly earnings.	Surplus over provisions, house rent, &c.
Parents and one child	$10 24	$17 00	$6 76
Three adults	8 26	17 43	9 17
Parents and two children	12 26	16 72	4 46
Parents and three children	13 26	17 60	4 34
Parents and four children	17 79	23 23	5 44
Parents and five children	15 23	17 11	1 88
Parents and six children	11 67	16 80	1 13
Parents and seven children	22 78	28 03	1 25
General average of above	$14 29	$18 96	$4 67

In order to obtain the data for further comparisons, and especially to determine whether the large increase in wages in 1867–68, has brought any real net gain to the employes of manufacturing establishments, a careful investigation was instituted in respect to the earnings and expenditures of individuals and families in 1860, similarly situated in all respects with those whose average aggregate weekly receipts and expenditures were given in the above table for 1867: and in so doing it has fortunately happened that through the earnest coöperation of several proprietors or agents of manufacturing establishments, the data in respect to 1860 have been obtained, in many instances, from the same specific individuals or families which supplied the information relative to 1867. These data, carefully verified by reference to contemporary price currents and other evidence, have afforded the means of constructing the following

Table showing the average weekly expenditure of families of varying numbers in the manufacturing towns of the United States for the years 1860 and 1867, respectively.

Size of families.	Average weekly rent, clothing, &c.		Average weekly expenditures for provisions, house rent, clothing, &c.		Surplus in 1860.
	In 1867.	In 1860.	In 1867.	In 1860.
Parents and one child	$17 00	$12 17	$17 00	$9 96	$2 21
Three adults	17 82	12 00	17 82	10 31	1 69
Parents and two children	18 75	11 50	18 75	10 79	71
Parents and three children	19 50	12 41	19 50	11 38	1 06

General average of the above	$18 96	$12 16	$18 96	$10 85	$1 31

In constructing the above table it has been assumed for purposes of comparison, (and so expressed in the third column of the table,) that the total average weekly wages obtained in 1867, viz., $18 96, were entirely expended, in the following proportions: $14 29 for provisions, rent, fuel, &c., and the balance, $4 67, for clothing, domestic dry goods, housekeeping articles, luxuries, &c. Now the same quantities and qualities of provisions, groceries, clothing, rent, fuel and housekeeping articles could have been obtained in 1860 and 1861 for the relative amounts indicated in the fourth column; showing an average weekly cost of $10 85 in 1860, as compared with $18 96 in 1867; and leaving a balance in the former year of $1 31 (gold) per week in favor of the operative, as against no corresponding surplus whatever in 1867 (86; or, in other words, supposing the requirements for food, clothing and shelter to have been the same in 1867 as in 1860, the operatives referred to in the table, who received in 1867 an average of $18 96 per week, obtained in that year only sufficient to give them the actual necessaries and comforts of life; while the same men whose average weekly wages in 1860–61 were only $12 16, obtained with such earnings at that time the same articles of comfort or necessity, and had in addition a surplus of $1 31 (gold) per week, or $68 12 (gold) per annum.

As already stated, it has been assumed in this comparison that the wages received by the operatives in question, during the year 1867, were wholly consumed in their living. To a very considerable extent it has been found that this assumption has been justified by facts; but if, in view of the constant increase of deposits in savings banks and other evidences of accumulation, it should appear that a margin on an average has been saved, the figures presented show with equal certainty that on the same scale of living, the margin in 1860 must have exceeded that of 1867 in the proportions indicated. The fact, therefore, is established by incontrovertible evidence, that the condition of working men and women, in a majority of the manufacturing towns of the United States, is not as good at the present time as it was previous to the war; notwithstanding that their wages are greater, measured in gold, in 1867–68 than they were in 1860 61.

It should also be noted that most of the persons whose wages and expenditures have been discussed, were classed as skilled workmen, receiving an advance in wages of about 60 per cent. in 1867, as compared with the amount received in 1860. If their condition has not improved, the condition of the large class of unskilled workmen, such as day laborers, teamsters, watchmen and the like, is even worse. Thus a careful examination and comparison of a large number of returns from the proprietors or superintendents of furnaces, mills, foundries and factories in every description in almost all sections of the United States establish the fact, that the average weekly wages of laborers and other unskilled workmen for the years 1860–61 and 1867–68, respectively, were as follows: 1860–61, $6 04 per week; 1867–68, $9 54.

Assuming now, as in the preceding table, that the laborers in question expended their entire earnings in 1867, viz., $9 54, the same necessaries and comforts could have been obtained in 1860–61 by an expenditure of $6 52 per week, leaving an available surplus of $3 02 per week. In other words, the unskilled workmen of the country, obtaining the mere necessities, and none of the luxuries of life, were in a worse condition by $27 a year in 1867, with receipts of $9 54 per week, than they were in 1860–61 with receipts of $6 04 per week. The following tables illustrate the above facts more in detail:

THE OGDENSBURGH TROUBLES.

The Bogus Democratic Trouble Settled by Arbitration.

The Republican Victory Confirmed.

Full Particulars of the Meeting of the Arbitrators.

Their Decision Unanimously Sustained by the Citizens.

Peace and Prosperity Restored.

From the Ogdensburgh Republican, Jan. 4.

The trouble in the Democratic party, which for some months past has seemed likely to culminate in a serious breach, has been settled by arbitration, and appears to be entirely at an end. The matter was referred to a committee of three gentlemen, one chosen by each party, and the third by the two first named. The committee met on Wednesday evening, Dec. 18, and after a session of about two hours, decided that Mr. Kimball did not receive a fair vote, and that he was entitled to the nomination for Mayor. The committee also decided that Mr. Kimball should withdraw from the contest, and that the Democratic Common Council should appoint Mr. Kellogg Inspector of Election in the Second Ward, in place of Mr. Kimball, who had been appointed by the Democratic Board of Supervisors. The decision was unanimously sustained by a meeting of the Democratic citizens of the city, held on the evening of the 19th, at which Mr. Kimball did not appear, but sent a letter withdrawing from the contest, and requesting that his name be not used in connection with the Mayoralty. The meeting then appointed a committee of seven to wait upon Mr. Kellogg and request him to accept the appointment of Inspector, which he did, and the matter was thus settled.

The Democratic Common Council met on the evening of the 20th, and appointed Mr. Kellogg Inspector, as requested by the meeting of the previous evening. Mr. Kellogg declined the appointment, and the Council then appointed Mr. Kimball, who accepted. The Democratic Board of Supervisors met on the 21st, and appointed Mr. Kellogg Inspector, in accordance with the decision of the arbitrators, and the Democratic Common Council met on the same evening, and appointed Mr. Kimball Inspector, in accordance with the decision of the arbitrators. Mr. Kellogg declined the appointment, and Mr. Kimball accepted, and has since qualified and entered upon the duties of the office. Thus the matter has been settled in accordance with the decision of the arbitrators, and the Democratic party is now united and harmonious. The following is the decision of the arbitrators:

OGDENSBURGH, Dec. 18, 1867.

We, the undersigned, having been appointed a committee to settle the difficulties existing in the Democratic party of this city, and to restore harmony and unity of action in the same, do hereby agree to the following decision:

WASHINGTON.

Particulars of the Negotiations for the Islands of St. Thomas.

Debate in the Senate Relative to the Amnesty Proclamation.

The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill in the House.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The documents in connection with the St. Thomas treaty are all of confidential character, but so much has recently been said about them in private conversation here, that some of their leading points may be given. It appears that negotiations for the purchase of the Danish Islands were begun four years ago, during Mr. LINCOLN's administration, when Mr. SEWARD made proposals for them, saying they were wanted by our country for a naval station. The Danish Minister did not think at all favorably of the proposition, but of course forwarded it to his Government. From the King of Denmark, through his Foreign Secretary, there soon came answer that the islands were not for sale and that it was not considered advisable to entertain the proposition. Then followed the death of Mr. LINCOLN, the accession of Mr. JOHNSON and a change in the Danish home Government, and in the Fall of 1865 Mr. SEWARD renewed his proposal. New influences were about the King of Denmark, and he replied, to the effect that while he still had no desire to sell, the United States might make it for his pecuniary advantage to do so. A period of silence or inaction seems to have followed. But in 1866, just as the Danish Minister was going home on leave of absence, Mr. SEWARD put into his hands a letter, in which he offered $5,000,000 for the three islands. This was duly laid before the King of Denmark, and he made answer that the price was not sufficient. In the Winter of 1866 Mr. FRED. SEWARD made his trip to St. Thomas, and when he returned our Secretary of State was more than ever anxious to buy the islands, and in the Spring of 1867, the matter began to take the shape it finally assumed. The Danish Government from the first, as the correspondence shows, was very loth to negotiate, and seems to have sometimes doubted whether Mr. SEWARD would be sustained by the legislative branch of the Government. The Secretary, however, represented that the Executive had complete right to make the treaty; that there was no doubt of its ratification by the Senate, and that the House and the country would approve the action of the Senate. The Secretary of the Navy had formally recommended the purchase of the islands. The Assistant Secretary was a strong advocate of the treaty. Two or three prominent Senators had declared for it. Mr. THAD. STEVENS had made a speech in the House showing his confidence in Secretary SEWARD, and had carried that body with him on an important question of money. The fact that negotiations were going on had become public, and was commented upon by our newspapers without hostility to the idea of purchase, and the Danish Minister finally became persuaded that the country really wanted the islands, and that Mr. SEWARD was correct in his view that the treaty would at once be ratified as a matter of course. This being the situation it was not difficult to reach an understanding, and our offer of seven and a half millions was accepted. The Danish Government refused, however, point blank to sign the treaty unless the people of St. Thomas were willing to be transferred to the United States, being moved to this refusal by considerations of home policy. Mr. SEWARD did not deem this of consequence, but finally consented, and, under circumstances that will readily be recalled, the inhabitants of the island voted almost unanimously for the transfer. The treaty was signed in October, 1867, and laid before the Senate in the following December, more than thirteen months ago. The ratifications were to have been exchanged in February, 1868, and proper action was accordingly taken by the Danish Government. No action whatever has yet been taken by our Senate, or even by the Foreign Relations Committee. The Danish authorities feel that they have been very badly used. They say the good faith of both countries, ours and theirs, is involved in the transaction. They have, to oblige our Government, sold islands that they had no wish to sell. They have carried out their part of obligations entered into after long negotiation, and they now ask that we shall meet our part of the bargain to which they consider our national honor has been pledged by the Administration acting through Mr. SEWARD. The Secretary admits the force of this view, so does Mr. SUMNER, and there is reason to believe that it is entertained by other Congressmen of both branches. It is pretty certain that the subject will be discussed before the end of the Session, in open as well as in secret Senate proceedings.

CONGRESS.

There was an unexpectedly large attendance in the House when it was called to order this morning, and business went on as though it had not been interrupted. The result of the day's session was not productive of anything important. However, a great number of bills were introduced, many more than will see daylight at this session, inasmuch as it is hardly possible that the entire list of committees will be called even once before the 4th of March. So many special orders are now on the calendar, that the morning hour, in which reports from committees are made, will frequently be crowded out of the legislative day entirely. The number of bills introduced this term exceeds that of any Congress for many years; and when the vast amount of useless printing is contemplated, it may well be asked if Congress, in carrying out its ideas of retrenchment, cannot save a million or more by reducing the amount of its printed matter.

DISCUSSIONS IN THE SENATE.

There were two interesting discussions in the Senate to-day—one on the constitutional right of the President to issue the late amnesty proclamation in time of peace, and the other on a Southern claim for compensation for property appropriated by the United States forces during the recent rebellion. The former originated on the introduction of a resolution by Senator FERRY, calling on the President for a copy of the proclamation and for the authority under which it was issued. Senators FRELINGHUYSEN and CONKLING, DOOLITTLE and DAVIS engaged in some hair-splitting on the difference in meaning between the words "reprieve" and "pardon" and "amnesty," and on some nice points of law which they held were involved in the case. In the case of the Southern claim Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN opposed it on the usual grounds covered by the terms—the laws of war. But Mr. HOWE took a higher ground, and held that all precedents to the contrary notwithstanding, a Government, in time of war, as well as in time of peace, was bound to pay for everything it used. Mr. CONKLING made a strong speech against the claim, after which the adjournment took place.

THE TARIFF BILL.

It has been stated that the Tariff bill, now in Committee of the Whole in the House, is to be withdrawn and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means for revision. It is not probable that this will be done. The friends of the Tariff do not want it done, because of the delay which will ensue, to its damage. Its opponents think it can be defeated more easily by loading it with objectionable amendments, and by fostering the hostility of the rival interests, which will demand protection. In any event it will have hard work to pass both Houses and the gauntlet of ANDREW JOHNSON's veto before the 4th of March next.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WASHBURNE presented two of the Appropriation bills to-day—the Pension and the Consular and Diplomatic. There is little change in these from last year. The latter reduces the total for that service about $100,000. An amendment is added which provides that hereafter no Consular officer in Canada shall be allowed (emuage fees, actual or constructive for services rendered United States vessels touching at Canadian ports. When the Pensions bill comes up to-morrow Mr. WASHBURNE will preface its consideration by a brief speech upon the financial condition of the Government. He will present a comprehensive, balance sheet of the receipts and expenditures for the past two years, and of the estimates for the next fiscal year, and he will endeavor to impress upon Congress the necessity of cutting down expenses everywhere, and of reforming the civil service in every branch, in order to enable the new administration to begin its career with a prospect of success.

STEAM SHIP LINE TO MEXICO.

A bill was introduced in the Senate to-day by Senator POMEROY, providing for the establishment of a steam mail service between New-York and Sisal and Vera Cruz, Mexico, to sail at least once a week, with a subsidy of $5,000 for the round trip.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

The abuse of the franking privilege was the subject of a considerable debate in the House to-day. Messrs. LYNCH, CAKE and BALDWIN made personal explanations on the subject. Mr. LYNCH completely refuted the charge against him of improperly using his frank, and scored Mr. BALDWIN, the editor of the Worcester Spy, which paper had installed him unjustly, with so much rigor that it brought that gentleman to his feet, who not only disclaimed all intention of doing Mr. LYNCH injustice, but repudiated the article itself, which he said he did not write.

NEWSPAPER REPORTS.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, made a sensible point this morning when he objected to the resolution of Mr. ELA, of New-Hampshire, proposing to investigate a certain newspaper statement about a post route contract in Arizona. He said he thought it was about time for the House to stop this matter of taking up every irresponsible statement that appeared in the newspapers, and dignifying it by an investigation, as if it proceeded from a source entitled to credence. The House will by and by learn that many of the statements which are brought to its notice are the off-spring of a purely malevolent spirit, and are seldom based upon a single material fact.

SUBMARINE CABLES.

The parties who obtained from the Legislature of New-York last Winter the exclusive right to land a cable upon the shores of that State, and subsequently sold that right to some French capitalists, may be interested in the joint resolution introduced into the Senate to-day by Mr. MORTON and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, prohibiting the landing of such cable.

THE NAVAL ENGINEER-IN-CHIEF.

A bill passed the House to-day, reported from the Naval Committee by Judge KELLY, providing that the President may hereafter, in the appointment of an Engineer-in-Chief of the navy, make such appointment, if he sees fit, from civil life. Heretofore the selection has, by law, been restricted to the Board of Chief Engineers of the Navy.

THE NEW-YORK ELECTION FRAUDS.

The Congress Committee who have charge of the investigation of the election frauds in New-York, have taken a large mass of testimony which goes to show the perpetration of immense frauds in New York City. The Committee will not be able to finish their labors before twelve or fourteen days, but a partial report will be made to the House at the end of the week and leave asked to have the evidence taken so far printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

The claim of Mrs. MURPHY, of Decatur, Ala., for compensation for alleged losses sustained by the seizure of her property, during the rebellion, by the United States forces, which came up in the Senate to-day, is but the forerunner of many thousand other demands of a similar character. Should this claim be allowed it will be a precedent which, if followed, will rob the Treasury of an amount of money at present impossible to calculate. Senator HOWE states that the whole amount will not exceed $500,000, but others are of the opinion that it will number as many millions. More than one-quarter of these claims are now held by brokers and speculators.

EVENING RECEPTIONS.

Secretary and Mrs. MCCULLOCH have issued cards for three evening receptions, to occur respectively on the 8th and 22d of January, and on the 5th of February.

MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION.

The Methodist Episcopal Missionary demonstration will be inaugurated here on next Sunday by imposing ceremonies. Bishop AMES will preach in the morning at one of the churches. Judge FISHER will deliver an opening address, and Chief Justice CHASE will preside at an evening celebration. Bishop JAMES is also announced to speak, together with several other distinguished ministers.

Dispatches to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, Jan. 5.

GEN. GRANT AND THE PRINTERS.

At noon to-day the members of the Printers' Grant and Colfax Club, numbering about one hundred, called at the Headquarters of the Army of the United States, for the purpose of presenting to Gen. GRANT a congratulatory letter of their Club, which had been engrossed on parchment, signed by all the members, and neatly framed. Gen. GRANT met these gentlemen in the reception-room at headquarters, and after a short speech from CHARLES B. LATHROP, Esq., foreman of the Public Printing Office and President of the Club, the members were individually presented, and shook hands with the General. At the conclusion of this formality, Gen. GRANT said:

"I thank you for this manifestation of your sentiments. I do not know of anything more that I can say, than that I am glad to have had the support of all classes, and particularly of those who are finding employment under the Government. I hope there will be nothing in my course hereafter to make you regret the present you have seen fit to give."

GEN. SPINNER.

Gen. SPINNER still remains very unwell, and is unable to be at his desk at the Treasury Department.

TROOPS IN THE INDIAN COUNTRY.

In compliance with the Senate resolution of the 14th ultimo, the Secretary of War to-day transmitted to the Senate a statement as to the number of United States troops employed in connection with the Indian hostilities in protecting the Missouri River traffic and the Union Pacific Railroad, and otherwise policing that region of the country, of which the following is a recapitulation:

"Number of regular troops employed in guarding and protecting the frontier, 10,691; operating against the Indians and policing the frontier, 6,824; operating against the Indians, 2,119; guarding the Union Pacific Railroad and policing the frontier, 657; guarding the Union Pacific Railroad, 405; guarding the traffic on the Missouri River, 1,862; operating against the Indians and guarding the Union Pacific Railroad, 3,553. Total regular troops, 25,601. Add volunteer troops, 1,213—aggregate 26,814."

FORTIETH CONGRESS.

SUBMARINE CABLES.

Mr. MORTON offered a joint resolution forbidding the landing in any submarine cable in any part of the territory of the United States without the consent of Congress. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING introduced a bill to authorize the New-York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company to land one or more submarine cables upon the shores of the United States, and to maintain and work such cables for the transmission of messages and intelligence between the United States and Europe, or any of the intermediate places, during the existence of the Company's charter. Referred to the Committee of Commerce.

THE AMNESTY PROCLAMATION.

Mr. FERRY offered a resolution requesting the President to transmit a copy of his late amnesty proclamation, with a statement of the authority by which he issued it. Mr. FERRY said that he offered the resolution because, although he favored the amnesty, he doubted the right of the President to grant it in this sweeping way, and he wished to have the question settled.

Mr. HOWARD was very glad that the attention of the Senate had been called to the question. He thought it important that the people of the United States should know whether the President had such dispensing power as was implied in the issue of this proclamation. He believed that the assumption by the Executive of such a power was entirely unwarranted by the Constitution.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN also was glad that attention was called to the proclamation, although he thought it more important in raising a great question in regard to the powers of the Executive than in any other respect. He did not find in the Constitution a grant of any such power as the President claimed in the case, nor power to grant amnesty at all. In England the King had such power, but that was because his representing the sovereignty of the nation against which the offence is committed. There it is The King vs. A. B.; but in the United States it is not The President vs. A. B., but The People vs. A. B.

Mr. CONKLING remarked that, even in England, of late years, it has never been insisted that the King had a right to pardon by general proclamation without naming anybody pardoned. The President's proclamation assumed not merely that he had a right to pardon A B, charged with an offence, but not convicted, but that he has a right so dispense clemency to all persons whatever. If that assumption is correct, then the Governor of New-York had a right to pardon and set free all persons accused or suspected of burglary, arson and murder, or any other crimes—a power never exercised and never claimed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE said the Supreme Court had expressly decided in the case of GARLAND that the President had power, by general proclamation, at any time after the commission of the offence, before legal proceedings or during their pendency, as well as after as before conviction, to pardon offences, and that Congress had no right whatever to limit this power, in the exercise of which the President does represent the sovereignty of the people of the United States. He read from the decision of the Supreme Court in the Garland case in support of his position.

Mr. CONKLING inquired whether it was decided in the Garland case that the President could pardon in general terms before conviction.

Mr. DOOLITTLE replied that he believed that GARLAND was pardoned under such a general proclamation.

Mr. FERRY asked whether the Senator made any distinction between pardon and amnesty.

Mr. DOOLITTLE said no; the question whether the persons pardoned were guilty or not. The proclamation, in his opinion, was immaterial, and had not been decided by the Court, because no one has thought of raising it. The President having the right to pardon one offender, had, as a matter of course, a right to pardon another, or several persons together, guilty or accused of the same crime.

Mr. DAVIS approved of the resolution of inquiry, because the subject was important; but he had no doubt of the President's right to grant the amnesty, the Constitution vesting such power wholly in the President; not at all in Congress. He thought there could be no doubt of the right to pardon before conviction as well as after.

Mr. CONKLING remarked that the decision in the Garland case did not go so far as Mr. DOOLITTLE thought it did. The question, he said, was not whether it was for an Executive to pardon a man for an offence, but whether he could thus pardon all men for all offences—a very important question.

Mr. DOOLITTLE said that he had been mistaken in saying that GARLAND was pardoned under a general amnesty without being named, but he held the decision in that case to be that the power of the President to pardon and grant reprrives, except in the case of impeachment, is unlimited.

The question was then taken upon the resolution and it was adopted.

A NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. WILSON introduced a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency, secured by pledge of public stocks, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Section one makes it unlawful for any banks organized under the said act to receive any interest on money in any form, for or on account of any deposit made by, with or on account of any other bank, corporation or individual; provided, however, that the State, city and town treasurers may receive interest on their deposits in any bank or banks.

Section two prohibits any bank officers from certifying of good any check, draft or order to pay any moneys of deposit or other evidence of debt, unless at the time of such certificate or issue the whole amount so certified is in the actual keeping of said bank and payable on demand.

Section three provides that hereafter all deposits in the United States in any bank, or any bank shall be special deposits, not to be used by said banks for loans or discounts, but held subject to draft by the Treasurer of the United States or other disbursing officers; and such deposits shall not be subject to taxation.

Section four provides that the Comptroller of the Currency may at any time call on any banking association for a statement of its affairs on any past day to be by him specified, and such report shall be made within five days of the receipt of the requisition therefor, with a penalty of $100 for every day's delay of such report after the said five days; abstracts of such report shall be published by the Comptroller in a newspaper in Washington, and when any banking or other Savings Association shall be published in a newspaper in the place where the Association is established, or in the nearest place thereto, such publication to be at the expense of the Association making said report. Each Association is required to report to the Comptroller on the first Tuesday of each month, the condition of the Association on the preceding day, said report to include a report of loans and discounts, specie deposits, and circulation.

Mr. POMEROY introduced a bill to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and Mexico, which was referred to the Committee of Post Offices and Roads.

It authorises the Postmaster-General to make contracts, to continue not exceeding ten years, for the transportation of all mails between the port of New-York and the ports of Sisal and Vera Cruz, with responsible parties possessing ample ability to furnish the necessary steamships, provided that he require the despatch of a mail steamship from New-York at least once in fifteen days, and that the expense of such service shall not exceed $6,000 per round trip. In case of failure to perform any pre vided trip, deduction is to be made from the compensation, and suitable fines and penalties may also be imposed for delays and irregularities in the performance of service according to contract.

GEORGIA RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill to enable the people of Georgia to form a State Government, republican in form, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

It provides for the repealing of so much of the act of June 25, 1868, as relates to Georgia, and making the Government of the State provisional only, and subject to the act of March 2, 1867. All officers elected under the present proposed Constitution of said State, who are not disfranchised by the Fourteenth Amendment or any of the acts above mentioned, except members of the Legislature, shall continue in office until the State be fully restored. It also provides that such members of the Convention, elected under the laws of Congress to form a State Constitution, as are not disfranchised, shall assemble on the first Monday of March next, with full power to alter or amend said Constitution in any manner not in conflict with the laws of Congress and the Constitution. Said State Constitution, as amended, shall be submitted to the people at such time as the Convention may appoint; and on ratification or rejection of said amended Constitution, such persons and no others shall vote as shall be prescribed in said amended Constitution, provided that no person shall be excluded from voting on account of race or color. When said amended Constitution shall have been ratified by a majority of the votes, it may be submitted for the consideration of Congress.

PUNISHMENT OF CRIMES.

Mr. SUMNER introduced a bill, providing that accessories to a violation of the fifty-fifth section of the National Currency act shall receive the same punishment as the principal of the association.

Also a bill declaring that the words "trial at common law" in the first section of the act of July, 1862, relating to the competency of witnesses, shall be held to include criminal trials and proceedings; also Judges to impose sentences of imprisonment with hard labor in cases where the law merely provides for imprisonment; also a bill to regulate prosecutions under the laws of the United States for embezzling and kindred offences, making a general allegation of embezzlement, &c., sufficient in the indictment and making no restriction as to the amount embezzled; also a bill to repeal the act of Feb. 28, 1803, prohibiting the importation of certain persons into certain States, all of which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER also introduced a bill to provide for the execution, in the District of Columbia, of commissions issued by the Courts of the States and Territories and of foreign nations, and for taking depositions to be used in such Courts. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Also a bill to provide for the punishment of accessories in criminal offences against the United States. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. HOWE called up the bill for the relief of SUE MURPHY, of Decatur, Ala.

Messrs. FRELINGHUYSEN and HOWARD read arguments against allowing the claim, taking the general ground that the Government was not bound to indemnity persons for losses inflicted by the war.

Mr. HOWE advocated the claim upon the ground that even if the Government were not obliged to pay for losses inflicted by its army, it certainly was obliged to pay for property of loyal citizens taken and used by itself.

Mr. CONKLING made an argument against paying the claim.

Without acting upon the bill the Senate, at 3:40, went into Executive Session, after which a short open session was held, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Speaker announced that the recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1870.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE rose to a question of order, believing that a quorum was not present. He moved that the roll of members be called. The question was taken, and decided in the negative.

The bill reported by Mr. WASHBURNE was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and made the special order for to-morrow, and from day to day until disposed of.

THE OVERLAND MAILS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, by instruction of the Committee on Appropriations, offered a preamble and resolution setting forth that on the 15th day of December, 1868, the House referred to that Committee a letter from the Postmaster General, in answer to a resolution of the House relative to the contract for carrying the overland mails.

Whereas, It appears from a communication from Special Agent HALE to Hon. Geo. W. MCLELLAN, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, stating that WELLS, FARGO & Co., the contractors for the transportation of said mail, have not provided adequate facilities, and that express matter has been carried to the exclusion of the mails, which were left on the route day after day and week after week, and never protected, and that on the 16th of November six thousand pounds of mail matter were piled up in an open stock yard; and

Whereas, It is reported by the Special Agent that the employes of WELLS, FARGO & CO. have had a hand in ridding the letter mail; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to make no payment to WELLS, FARGO & Co., until full examination be made into the contract with WELLS, FARGO & Co., and into the truth of the charges of the Special Agent of the Post Office Department, respecting the delinquencies of said firm in carrying the mails.

Mr. JOHNSON objected to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

Mr. WASHBURNE said he would move a suspension of the rules on Monday next to see whether the House would pass the resolution.

CONSULAR FEES.

On motion of Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, a resolution was adopted that the secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the House whether any consular officers of the United States have demanded and received, or are now demanding and receiving, for the verification of invoices, fees greater than those provided by law. If so, what consular officers and what amount received; and that the Secretary also inform the House what Consuls have failed or neglected to make returns, for how long a time; and that he furnish, inform the House the probable amount now due to the United States in the hands of such officers.

WELLS, FARGO & CO.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, referring to the subject of the Overland Mail in connection with WELLS, FARGO & Co., asked permission of the House that a resolution be offered for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the charges.

Mr. WASHBURNE said the Committee on Appropriations were desirous that a special committee should be raised.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL RANDALL.

Mr. ELA asked leave to offer a preamble and resolution providing for a special committee of five members, to investigate certain newspaper charges against Postmaster-General RANDALL, in connection with the Arizona mail service.

Mr. MCKEE objected to the consideration of the resolution.

SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. BARNES offered the following resolution:

Be it resolved, &c., That it is the imperative duty of this Government to develop its resources, increase its revenue and retain its surplus gold, with a view to as speedy a return to specie payment as is possible; that it will retard this purpose, disturb values and interfere with the right to contract by the currency in any respect or to undertake to fix the time by law when specie payments shall commence until gold and legal-tender notes have become nearly approximate in value through the operation of natural causes.

The consideration of the resolution was objected to.

THE REGISTER OF VESSELS.

Mr. ELIOT introduced a bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, to extend the laws relative to the register of vessels.

THE LINCOLN ART ASSOCIATION.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill to incorporate the Lincoln Art Association of Washington, which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

A NEW EXECUTIVE MANSION.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill in relation to a site for an Executive mansion on Meridian Hill, in the County of Washington, D. C.

It proposes to have appropriated a tract of land beginning at a point on the northern side of Boundary-street, opposite the eastern side of Fifteenth-street West; thence to Interpolis Bounding-street, extending thence along the northern side of Boundary to a point opposite the western side of Seventeenth-street West; thence in a northern direction to intersect the western side of Central-avenue.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LYNCH, upon a question of privilege, had read extracts from articles in the Cincinnati Gazette and the Worcester Spy, intimating that he had sold the use of his frank, which was a common thing among members of Congress. He should have taken no notice of the matter here but for the article in the Spy, which was edited by a member of the House, and from the fact that the paper which originated the libel had substantially reiterated it after all the circumstances had been fully explained by telegraph. He has franked the Mercantile Journal containing his speech, as it had been the uniform practice of members to do, which was in conformity to law, and was one of the purposes for which the privilege was conferred. Believing the newspaper a better medium of circulation than pamphlets, he should use it whenever he had occasion, so long as the law allowed it. The right to do so was precisely the same as that of newspaper publishers to exchange. It was well known that pamphlets had been in general use for franking for many years by many members, and that tons of newspapers and other documents had been franked by Committees of both parties pending the late election, which were not entitled to the frank at all, and that the very newspaper which published the libel upon him had been so franked. These papers had known all this, and had never called it an abuse. Having explained the matter fully, and shown, as he said, the unfairness and inconsistency of the papers, he would leave the matter without further comments.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Massachusetts, who is the proprietor of the Worcester Spy, said the gentleman certainly did not suppose that he was responsible for the article in question, which appeared in the Spy during his absence from that city. His knowledge of the gentleman from Maine assured him the charges could not possibly be true to the extent represented. From the result of his investigation he found that the gentleman had acted entirely within the law. It was, however, undoubtedly true that the law was defective, and accordingly the required modifications ought to be made.

Mr. COX, of Ohio, said the gentleman from Maine was not the only member of the House attacked by the Cincinnati Gazette, which paper had made these charges against him. He would not have cared for the article in the Gazette, had it not been copied into respectable papers like the New-York Tribune, and commented upon. He did not consider the Gazette capable of slandering him.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. PRICE introduced a bill providing that all railroad companies which have accepted, or may hereafter accept, any grant of land from the United States, or any State which has received grants of the public lands, shall, in the construction of their railroads, and in the subsequent repair of the same, use only iron of American manufacture; and, in case of their refusal or neglect to do so, all such grants of land to said companies shall be null and void.

The bill was referred to the Committee which reported it.

THE POOR OF WASHINGTON.

An ineffectual effort was made to take up, with a view to its passage, the bill appropriating $30,000 for the temporary relief of the poor and destitute population in the District of Columbia.

THE MECHANICS' AND FARMERS' BANK OF ALBANY.

On motion of Mr. HOOPER a resolution was passed calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information in relation to the Mechanics' and Farmers' Bank of Albany, New-York, whether there have been evasions of law, and omissions to comply with the National Currency act.

THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. KELLEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill providing that from and after this date, in order to secure further efficiency of the navy, a civilian may be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill the position of Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering in the Navy Department.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE FINANCES.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, asked leave to offer a preamble setting forth that

Whereas, Resolutions have been introduced and passed in both Houses of Congress, severely criticising and condemning the late message of the President of the United States, and especially upon the subject of the national finances, and his suggestions relative to the satisfaction of the national embarrassment; and

Whereas, It is the right and duty of the President to give to Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall deem necessary and expedient; be it, therefore,

Resolved, That such resolutions are an infringement upon the rights of the Executive, and are calculated to obstruct the faithful discharge of his constitutional duty; and that however much the Congress may differ with the President upon his recommendations in regard to the discharge of the national debt, it involves a question which should be maturely considered by every American citizen, and which the American people have the right to determine, as they doubtless in their own good time will, governed by the precedents and principles which have controlled the enlightened nations of the world, and according to the exigencies which surround them, in a manner which will vindicate their credit and honor.

Resolved, That one hundred thousand copies of the late annual message of the President be published for the benefit of the people of the United States.

Objection was made to the consideration of the above resolutions.

Other business was transacted, including the introdnoion of bills and resolutions.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

On motion of Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, Mr. COLLOM in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the President's annual message of 1867.

Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, made a lengthy speech in favor of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. CAKE, of Ohio, delivered a speech presenting the views of the workingmen whom he had the honor to represent. In the course of his remarks, he said, "Legislation was too much in the interest of capital, which secured improper advantages over the toiling classes, the establishment of monopolies, the giving of special privileges and banking systems, appropriated labor without equivalent, and these things had brought the working classes to view their proper condition, and they were learning that the ballot-boxes are stronger than armies."

The Committee rose, and the House adjourned.

ALBANY.

Opening of the New Legislature Yesterday.

The Addresses of the Lieutenant-Governor and the Speaker.

Reception of the Governor's Message.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Jan. 5, 1869.

The members of the Legislature made their way to the Capitol this morning through a drenching rain that began last night and continued without interruption until noon to-day. The call of the roll showed but few absentees in either House, the Senate lacking only one and the House five members. The Assembly gallery was crowded with spectators, who were unanimous in the expression of their opinion of the vast superiority—in appearance—of the present Assembly over that of last year. In the Senate a few ladies were present, who expressed their admiration of the fine physique of the new Lieutenant Governor, who, so far as bulk and stature are concerned, fills the Speaker's chair more completely than it has been filled in many years. He made his début as presiding officer in a speech, whose chief characteristic, as well as highest merit, in the opinion of those who heard it, consisted in its brevity. His political experience, he said, had convinced him of the folly of acrimonious discussion of political questions, and he was willing to believe that the mass of the people of both parties were honest and equally desirous of promoting the public good and perpetuating constitutional liberty. His remarks, though commonplace, taken in connection with the appearance of the man, made a favorable impression on the Senators, and the opinion is generally entertained that Mr. BEACH will make a fair and impartial, though not a brilliant or rapid presiding officer.

While awaiting the organization of the Assembly, the Senate transacted considerable business in the way of resolutions and notices of bills. Among the more important notices was one from Mr. CREAMER, of New-York, for a bill to amend the Metropolitan Excise law. Mr. CREAMER's bill proposes to reduce the license fee of all venders of spirituous liquors to $100, and of beer sellers to $30. It deprives the Police of the power to arrest without warrant; allows liquor shops to keep open all hours, except from 1 to 4 A. M. on week days, and on Sundays permits them to open after 2 P. M. No licenses are to be revoked without a two-thirds vote of the Board of Excise.

Mr. CREAMER also gave notice of a bill to incorporate a new gas company to be called the "Empire," and to supply New-Yorkers with gas from Seventy-ninth-street to Harlem River.

Mr. GENET noticed the renewal of his bill of last session for a a railroad through One Hundred and Twenty-fifth-street, and also a bill to amend the act creating the Fire Commissioners so as to include the City of Brooklyn.

Mr. FIERCE, of Brooklyn, noticed a proposal to amend the Constitution respecting the number of Judges of the Court of Appeals, and also a bill to extend Prospect Park, and open an avenue thither from Atlantic-street, near Clinton.

Mr. BEACH offered a resolution, which was laid on the table, referring to the Railroad Committee, with power to send for persons and papers, the action of the Hudson River, New-York Central and Erie Railroads in issuing new stock, and to report what legislation, if any, was required to protect the interests of bona fide stockholders.

The Assembly did little beyond organizing itself, and listening, or pretending to listen, to the reading of the Governor's message. Speaker YOUNGLOVE's address, on taking the chair, was received with considerable enthusiasm, and drew forth several rounds of applause from the galleries, especially that portion relating to the protection that would soon be extended to Southern men, without distinction of race or color. Members of all parties agree that Mr. YOUNGLOVE will make an impartial, upright, straightforward and honest Speaker, and it is not believed by the best portion of the Republicans that he will permit the Senatorial question to enter in any way into the formation of committees.

The Governor's Message excites little comment, and, with the exception of the homily about the "purity of the ballot," which puts the Governor in the novel light of a first-class joker, is about the kind of document that everybody expected from his Excellency. Two thousand copies of the Message were ordered to be printed in German, but a suggestion to print the same number in Irish was not well received by the Governor's friends, which indicates that the Teutonic is more cultivated by the Democracy just now than the Celt.

The Legislature will probably adjourn on Thursday to Tuesday of next week, to give the Speaker time to construct his committees.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

SENATE....ALBANY, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

The Senate was called to order by Hon. ALLEN C. BEACH, Lieutenant-Governor, who addressed the Senate as follows:

ADDRESS OF LIEUT.-GOV. BEACH.

SENATORS: Elected by the people to the office of Lieutenant-Governor, the Constitution devolves on me the duty of acting as President of the Senate. That duty it is my earnest desire to discharge courteously, impartially and correctly. I am aware that success will depend very much upon that assistance and indulgence which I earnestly bespeak, and which I confidently expect Senators will kindly extend to me. Experience in political life tends to impress men with the folly of acrimonious dissension and bitter personal strife relative to differences of political opinion, and teaches them that the people, whatever their politics, are patriotic, and differ only as to the method of securing the prosperity of the country and the permanence of constitutional government. Some of the momentous and exciting questions which have agitated our land have been settled, let us hope, forever, and now, when the whole country is suffering in consequence of the vast sacrifices of life and treasure incident to the suppression of the rebellion and the preservation of the unity of the Republic, the people of all parties agree in demanding rigid economy, unswerving honesty and wise statesmanship in the administration of their affairs. Let the action of the Empire State be an example to all the other States of such wise and economical administration that they will emulate the example. Then may we reasonably expect that our Federal Government will rest upon an enduring basis, and our own noble State and our beloved Union will again enter upon a career of unexampled prosperity.

Committees were appointed to wait on the Governor, and to inform the Assembly that the Senate was ready for business.

EXTENSIVE ROBBERY.

Two Cash Boxes Containing $150,000 Worth of Bonds and Securities Stolen from a Safe—No Clue to the Thieves.

Wall-street seems to be the constant prey of the more daring and skillful class of thieves in this City, and despite the care exercised by a portion of those doing business in that moneyed thoroughfare, they seem to be plundered as easily and deftly as those careless ones who throw valuable bonds and securities on counters and desks ready to the hand of the first adroit thief who happens to catch a glimpse of the treasure. Once in a while the "bond robbers" stray into Exchange-place or Pine-street, as occurred on Saturday last, (the details of the robbery of that day have already appeared in our columns.) We have now another startling robbery to announce, and, as usual in such cases, the depredators made good their escape, leaving no trace to their whereabouts or identity.

It appears that on Thursday last, or New-Year's Eve, two large tin cash boxes were placed in an iron safe in the inner office of Messrs. CAMBRELENG & PYNE, lawyers and attorneys, doing business at No. 14 Wall-street. These boxes were owned by the individual members of the firm, and each contained a large amount in bonds and other securities. The box owned by Mr. CAMBRELENG contained sixty-one United States bonds, valued at $59,800; one New-York State bond for $5,000; one certificate of 100 shares in the Bowery Fire Insurance Company, valued at $2,500; 112 shares of the Hudson River Railroad, valued at $11,200; and one New-York County bond for $11,500, and $99,885 worth of stock certificates and securities. The box owned by Mr. PYNE contained thirty-five United States bonds, for $19,200; five Central Pacific Railroad bonds, for $5,000; two Union Pacific Railroad bonds, for $2,000; three California Pacific Railroad bonds, for $3,000; two Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad bonds, for $2,000, and three Cohoes bonds, for $3,000; besides a certificate of thirty shares of the Hope Fire Insurance Company, one certificate of sixty-five shares in New-York and Philadelphia Petroleum Company, one certificate of fourteen shares of Western Union Telegraph Company, one certificate of twenty shares of Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad.

These boxes and their contents, valued at over $150,000, were placed as usual in the large iron safe of the firm, on Thursday evening, as already stated. When the safe containing the boxes was locked, the key was deposited, agreeably to previous custom, in another and neighboring safe, which was securely locked and the key carried away by one of the firm. Friday being New-Year's Day, no one connected with the office of CAMBRELENG & PYNE came to the premises, and it was not until Saturday morning that any of the employes went near the safe. Their attention was, however, immediately attracted to it, in consequence of the door to the safe being discovered standing wide open. Further examination resulted in the discovery that both of the bond boxes had been removed. As the outer and inner doors to the office, and the door to the second safe containing the keys to the safe robbed, were all found intact and fastened, the inference is that the gang of thieves who perpetrated this daring and successful robbery had possessed themselves of duplicate keys to all the doors and safes. Judging from past experience in such larcenies and burglaries the Police are led to believe that the thieves must have had frequent and unmolested possession of the premises in order to perfect their skeleton keys, and as there are at present several well-known operators in this peculiar and flourishing line of business now in the City, the probability is that some of them are implicated in the present bond robbery.

The despoiled firm advertised their loss in yesterday's TIMES, and full details regarding the bonds and securities thus stolen will be found therein. The Police authorities were also notified of the facts, and Detective EUSTICE is now making what investigation he can in the matter. As a reward of $3,000 has been offered for the return of the boxes and their contents, "and no questions asked," the probability is that the case will never reach a Police Magistrate.

Hudson Highland Suspension Bridge.

Work will be speedily commenced under the terms of a contract just concluded for the suspension of a bridge across the Hudson River between "Anthony's Nose," on the line between the Counties of Westchester and Putnam on the East, and Fort Clinton on the West of the Hudson, about forty-three miles from the City of New York. This point is by far the most romantic on the river, and is far-famed as one in point of grandeur unsurpassed in America, and consequently is well known to the traveling public. The shore on the Fort Clinton side is composed of solid granite, and rises almost perpendicularly from 150 to 160 feet. The same can be said of the Nose, or opposite shore, except that the elevation is much greater, but being a sharp promontory as its name indicates, approaches to the bridge are feasible, both for railroad and highway purposes. The elevation of the bridge is to be 150 feet above highwater, and about on a level with the Western bank. Therefore, it will be readily perceived that the wonderful granite anchorage facilities offered guarantee, with proper construction, the safest and most durable structure of its kind in the world. At this point was stretched across the river an iron cable or chain during the Revolution, for the purpose of obstructing the passage up of the vessels of the enemy.

Immediately to the north of Fort Clinton, the western terminus of the bridge, is the mouth of Popolopen Creek, separating Forts Clinton and Montgomery, which creek has its source several miles to the westward among the Highlands of Orange and Rockland counties in the direction of Turner's, on the line of the New-York and Erie Railway, which is distant only seven miles. By actual survey a very desirable route for a railroad has been found from Turner's to the western terminus, and adopted by the Erie and New-England Railroad Company, incorporated during the past Winter in anticipation of the passage of the Bridge Charter, which road it is understood will within a few days, be under contract.

From the Nose, or eastern terminus, the Erie and New-England Railroad runs in a southerly direction along the side of the declivity about two miles, where it curves to the east, running in company with the Peekskill Valley Creek for several miles and thence on to New-England. The elevation of the bridge being a little over 150 feet, it will be readily seen that connections can be made in distances of less than three miles from the western terminus with the Hudson River Shore Railroad, now under contract, and from the eastern terminus with the Hudson River Railroad, both north and south, at grades of less than fifty feet to the mile.

The following will show the estimated dimensions, strength and cost of the bridge:

Clear span, 1,600 feet; length of bridge between the towers, 1,655 feet; total length of bridge, including approaches, 3,449 feet; height of bridge above high water, 155 feet; lines of broad and narrow gauge for railroads; highways for general travel; working safe load for the railroad lines, 2,400 tons; working safe load for the highways, 2,880 tons; total safe load for the bridge, 5,280 tons; load that would break the bridge, 25,171 tons; the bridge will carry at one time 32 passenger cars; the bridge would carry safely 34,560 people, and a train of 60 locomotives, if they could all be on it at once. Fifty-three locomotives and 18,000 people would fill it. There are to be 20 cables in 4 systems. Each cable will be about 14 inches in diameter. The cables contain 371,195,760 lbs. of best steel wire, or about 70,302 miles of steel wire. Total weight of iron and steel in the bridge, 17,005 tons. Total amount of masonry, 58,084 cubic yards. Total suspended weight, 9,051 tons. Height of towers above water, 280 feet. The bridge will leave the water-way of the river untouched. Cost of bridge, $3,500,000 to $4,000,000.

The route of the Erie and New-England Railroad, from Turner's to Derby, in the State of Connecticut, via the bridge, lessens the distance from the Erie Railway to Boston, compared with any existing or proposed route, from twenty-five to thirty-five miles.

The site was selected by the following Board of Engineers: HORATIO ALLEN, Esq., President Novelty Iron Works; Major-Gen. GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN; Major-Gen. H. G. WRIGHT, United States Engineers; Major-Gen. Q. A. GILMORE, United States Engineers; Major-Gen. H. W. BRIAM, United States Engineers; Hon. WM. J. MCALPINE, late State Engineer, &c.; CHARLES B. STEWART, Chief Engineer West Shore Hudson River Railroad; OLIVER H. BARNES, Esq., Chief Engineer Dutchess and Columbia Railroad; Col. JUDITH W. ADAMS, Engineer &c. &c.; Col. M. O. DAVIDSON, Chief Engineer of New-England and Erie Railroad; Gen. E. W. SERRELL, Chief Engineer of Erie and New-England Railroad; Gen. EGBERT L. VIELE, late State Surveyor of New-Jersey.

The evening and night patrol duty will be performed by the platoons, in turn. One section at a time, of the platoon that performed day duty, will be allowed fifty minutes for supper, while in reserve during the evening tour. McDevitt's $5,000 Challenge and Dion's Response—Matches Between Foster, Deery and Benjamin.

The telegraph yesterday announced from Chicago that JOHN MCDEVITT, of that city, had "challenged any player in the world to compete for the golden cue and $5,000 a side, American game, 1,500 or 2,000 points up." The telegram is correct in part only, and relates but about one-half of a story now more than a week old. First of all, MCDEVITT did not propose to play for the golden cue, and, by his resignation of the office of champion, and PHELAN & COLLENDER'S presentation to him of the emblem of championship, the golden cue is no longer a subject for competition. MCDEVITT in reality offered to play the push game for $5,000, but added a condition that was calculated to act as a bar to any match, viz., that the contest should take place in Chicago. This very important proviso the telegraph fails to mention; nor does it mention the fact, known in Chicago before the telegram was sent, that on Wednesday of last week JOSEPH DION made a counter, but eminently fairer, proposition, viz., to play three push games of 1,500 or 2,000 points—one in Chicago, one in Montreal, and the other in this City, each for $1,000 or $2,500 a side. DION is willing to play MCDEVITT, but not in Chicago alone; and it is well known that MELVIN FOSTER is anxious to play MCDEVITT anywhere east of Chicago, a challenge to this effect from FOSTER to MCDEVITT having awaited the latter's acceptance ever since the 26th of June last. DION and FOSTER are the only players likely to be pitted against MCDEVITT for an important stake, and it is a mere waste of words to ask either to play in Chicago. Furthermore, those who issue challenges like this of MCDEVITT'S, as well as those who circulate them, are well aware that they will not be accepted, and consequently that there will be no match.

On Monday morning FOSTER began to practice for his forthcoming return match with DION, which is to consist of 1,200 points, American game, push-shots prohibited, the stake being $1,000 aside. The match, which is to take place in Montreal on or about the 27th inst., is play or pay, the entire $4,000 having been put up five days prior to the contest last week at the Academy of Music. The following score, made by FOSTER against DERBY on Monday night, will give an idea as to how well he is now playing the push-barred game:

FOSTER—0, 4, 2, 5, 23, 9, 0, 2, 0, 0, 46, 30, 0, 17, 53, 132, 2, 39, 72, 0, 76, 90, 22, 12, 28, 0, 11, 6, 5, 3, 9, 46, 9, 9, 32, 0, 35, 40, 23, 45, 0, 24, 8, 177, 0, 0, 0. Total, 1,139; average, 24.

DERBY—0, 0, 5, 10, 40, 3, 0, 28, 12, 2, 77, 27, 19, 14, 28, 2, 12, 27, 41, 31, 0, 2, 11, 33, 56, 0, 54, 114, 6, 15, 8, 35, 14, 9, 45, 30, 17, 0, 78, 92, 26, 10, 49, 16, 8, 52, 100. Total, 1,259; average, 27.

This afternoon at 5 o'clock the match at French caroms, 300 points up, for $200, between FOSTER and RALPH BENJAMIN, will begin at Nos. 14 and 16 Fourth-avenue. FOSTER agrees to give his opponent 150 points, or one-half the game, and in addition gives the odds in money of 100 to 80.

The Condition of the Streets.

From the Battery to Central Park, Broadway was yesterday, a sea of slush of unknown depth, which it was impossible to cross except at a few points. Through this slough of nastiness vehicles rolled and splashed and staggered, spattering the combined filth of many days' accumulation on the sidewalks, the pedestrians and the store fronts, until so far as color was concerned, it was difficult to distinguish one from the other.

At the corner of Broadway and Chambers-street, a solitary sweeper, broome in hand, was struggling with the sea of slush that threatened to overwhelm him. At the corner of Prince-street and Broadway quite a large gang of men were at work opening culverts and cleaning off the crosswalks, and above this point other gangs were performing similar operations. On applying at the office of the contractor for cleaning the streets, our reporter was informed that a gang of from sixty to seventy men had been kept at work on Broadway since the last snow fall, but that it was utterly impossible to keep the crosswalks clear, as the traffic passing through Broadway drew the snow on again just as fast as it was swept off. Between the City Hall Park and Fourteenth-street the walks leading across streets running at right angles to Broadway were tolerably free from snow and slush, with two exceptions—those at Chambers and Canal streets. At the latter crossing the slush was at least six inches deep; but it is only right to say that the immense amount of traffic at this point renders it almost impossible to keep the crossing clean. The street-cleaning contractor considers that one of the great difficulties he has to contend in keeping Broadway in a passable condition is the absence of culverts. Between Canal and Chambers-street there is but one culvert, and the consequence is that water cannot flow off from that portion of Broadway.

Another difficulty is the practice of the Railroad Companies of throwing the snow from their tracks into the gutters, and thus stopping them up entirely. Were this forbidden, and the old ordinance compelling persons to keep the gutters in front of their dwellings and places of business open enforced, most of our streets would present a very different appearance to what they did yesterday.

A few cart-loads of snow have been carried away by the Street-cleaning Contractor from points where it accumulated so as to offer great impediments to traffic, and from Park-row and the lower end of the park, the Railroad Companies have cleared off a number of loads. It may be supposed that these wealthy corporations might well afford to clear the snow from the entire extent of their tracks, as the law compels them to do in Paris and other European cities. Instead of doing this, however, they either heap it up beside their tracks, or throw it in the gutters; in either case obstructing traffic and the flow of water down the gutter.

Annual Report of the Croton Aqueduct Department.

From the report of this Department for the past year, we take the following figures:

Received from water rents and penalties	$1,329,404 95
Received from taps in water-pipes	9,343 50
Received from sewer connections	32,791 00
Received from vault constructions	43,726 28
Petty Cash	1,272 43
Total	$1,319,544 26

The receipts in 1867, from water rents, were $65,676 95 less than in 1868. As compared with 1861, the receipts of 1868 are $466,450 60 greater.

Contracts for new stone block pavements to the extent of 49,862 superficial yards, were made during the year. The total length of stone block pavements completed and under contract is 31 miles, 3,922 feet. The quantity of Nicolson pavement laid during the year was 29,073 superficial yards.

In One Hundred and Twenty-fourth-street, between First and Third-avenues, a composition pavement called the "Fisk concrete" has been laid. It has not been down long enough to enable the Board to decide on its merits, and the same remark applies to the Stafford pavement.

Of 6-inch water pipes there have been laid 21,458 feet; of 12-inch, 8,268 feet; of 20-inch, 2,531—in all 6 miles 572 feet. There are now in the City a total length of main water pipes of 313 miles 3,045 feet.

The number of buildings used either as dwellings or for business purposes within the area of water distribution is 66,925, the number of manufactories 1,617, of churches 307. The number of buildings supplied with water free of charge is 296, as follows: Fire Department buildings, 61; Police, 52; Charities and Corrections, 55; Board of Education, 119; Markets, 10; City Hall Park, 6. The Central Park Commissioners and the street-cleaning contractor also receive a supply of water free of charge.

Brooklyn Board of Education.

A regular meeting of the Board was held last evening, the President, Dr. J. S. THORNE, in the chair. The principal business was in relation to the subject of free books, and the report of the Special Committee in regard to the matter was submitted. The report sets forth that there have been distributed to the several schools books to the amount of $87,000, and that there remains now on hand applicable to the further distribution of free books the sum of $3,000; that also the rules under which these books were distributed were probably, from want of experience on the part of the Committee, not sufficiently stringent, which was made self-evident from the fact that over $8,000 were spent for readers, thus giving to each scholar a book, whereas the custom of other cities has been to furnish one reader for two scholars, which course would have resulted in the saving of $4,000 in readers alone. No provision having been made by the Board for continuing during the ensuing year the distribution of books under the system inaugurated in 1868, the Committee do not seem themselves justified in recommending the incurring an expense for which moneys have not been legally raised in the annual budget. The report was adopted, and the Committee discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The Committee on the subject of furnishing more school accommodations for colored children, reported in favor of hiring rooms in the neighborhood of High and Jay streets for a primary school. The rooms could be hired for $300 a year, and a teacher can be procured for a like sum. The report was adopted, and the Board soon after adjourned.

The Scotland Steamer Explosion.

An account of the unfortunate killing of four men and the wounding of several others, engaged on Sunday last in blowing up the wreck of the steamer Scotland, has already appeared in the TIMES. The Scotland was the largest iron steamer afloat except the Great Eastern. Her capacity was 3,965 tons, her length 400 feet, depth 35 feet, beam 44 feet, and draught of water 24 feet. She had three decks, and her engines were 400 horse power. The vessel was built in 1865, and soon after struck upon a bar at Fire Island. She was extricated from this, but in a leaky condition, and, while steaming to this City, sunk in the south channel of New-York Bay. The depth of water in which the vessel sank varied from twenty to thirty feet, and consequently the entire top of the hull remained above water. Last October a contract was awarded by the Government to the Septolene Submarine Telegraph Company for the blowing up of the vast mass of iron. A specified sum was to be paid for the removal of the vessel, to the depth of twenty-two feet below the surface, and in addition, the Company were to receive all the valuable English wrought iron which could be taken from the hottom after the various explosions. They have worked diligently. Every part of the ship is at least eighteen feet below the surface, and much of it has been blown away to the depth of twenty-four feet. Though the Company will soon have performed their contract to reduce the entire wreck to a depth of twenty-two feet, they will continue operations for perhaps a year longer, with the view of raising all the iron obtainable. Operations continue, notwithstanding the late sad accident. A recent charge of 250 pounds of powder blew away half the length of one side of the vessel in varying depths. Capt. CHURCHILL, one of those who perished on Sunday, was exceedingly well acquainted with the business of submarine blasting, and was employed by the Government, in connection with torpedoes, during the war. Immediately before his death, GEORGE MOORE, one of the men in the boat remarked to him: "Supposing that torpedo should blow me up?" His reply was, "Don't trouble yourself. You won't know anything about it if it does." A few minutes after, both questioner and questioned were scattered to the winds in a thousand fragments. The two others killed were JAMES CLENT and LOUIS INGER. Capt. CHURCHILL leaves a wife at the Belmont Hotel, in Fulton-street. INGER was also married. The other two were single. STERNE, the driver, who was providentially saved, had been a gunner on the Monitor during her fight with the Merrimac.

Workingwomen's Home—Card from the Board of Trustees.

We desire to state that no change is contemplated in the character or management of the Workingwomen's Home. Certain unauthorized statements have been made which may have the effect of impairing its usefulness. The following extract from the Monthly Record for January is the best answer to the articles alluded to:

"The effort to provide a comfortable, economical and respectable residence for the workingwomen of this City, is still successfully prosecuted. The trustees have found it desirable to separate its management from that of the House of Industry, and MR. HALLIDAY has accordingly relinquished to MR. FIELD the entire supervision of the enterprise. As the inmates of the Home desire that all unnecessary notoriety should be avoided, the trustees have determined to discontinue the monthly notices of it which used to appear in the Record, but feel thankful to be able to say that it is surely overcoming the many little difficulties incident to a new enterprise, and they confidently expect that it will soon be filled to its entire capacity by a respectable, industrious and well-satisfied class of female boarders."

POLICE COURTS.

JEFFERSON MARKET—DODGE, JUSTICE.

SINGULAR ARSON CASE.

No. 435 West Thirty-ninth-street is a five-story tenement-house, having four families on each floor. Sunday night a fire broke out in this huge human hive, in the apartments of SAMUEL WHITEFORD, on the fourth floor, but the flames were quickly extinguished, and before any injury to life, which was far more imminent than destruction to property, had been done. Fire-Marshal BRACKETT having instituted an examination into the origin of the fire, soon found cause to further detain WHITEFORD, who had been arrested by the Twentieth Precinct Police, and finally the Marshal obtained a full confession from the prisoner. From this document it appears that WHITEFORD, on Sunday, was very drunk and quarreled with his wife, and that she, taking the children with her, left the apartment. He then appears to have lain down upon the bed in a drunken stupor, and slept for some time. During the night he got up and went to the adjoining room to get some clothes, and finding a barrel filled with soiled linen on the top of his trunk, he upset and broke it. He also spilled out some papers which he says he saw were some old letters of his first wife, and with the idea of destroying them struck a match and applied it to the heap of paper and linen. Further he does not remember, as he was dragged out of the burning room almost suffocated. He adhered to this story before the Magistrate, and was committed without bail for trial at the General Sessions.

BOY BURGLARS.

LEWIS FITZGERALD and JAMES SMITH, boys fourteen and sixteen years of age respectively, were accused of having committed a burglary upon the dwelling-house of THOMAS D. STEWART, No. 158 West Twenty-first-street. It is stated that they had effected an entrance through the front basement door, and were detected by one of the inmates about 1 o'clock in the morning leaving the house with property valued at $200. Two pistol shots fired at them brought to the spot Officers HART and FORD, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, who arrested the burglars and recovered the property. The culprits pleaded guilty, and were committed for trial at the General Sessions.

ESSEX MARKET—SHANDLEY, JUSTICE.

DISHONEST SERVANT.

ADELIA BERRY, of No. 238 West Forty-first-street, made an affidavit that on the 24th of December she had KATE CAHILL in her employ as a servant, and that she missed a silk dress, coat, money, flannel, handkerchief, belt and buckle, all valued at $78. The girl being suspected, was arrested and the collar, belt and buckle found in her possession. She pleaded guilty to having stolen the dress and flannel, and was committed for trial at the General Sessions.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

THE ROGER'S MURDER CASE.—An inquest was commenced yesterday by Coroner FLYNN, at the Coroners' office, in the case of Mr. CHARLES M. ROGERS, whose brutal and unprovoked murder has already received comment in these columns. The testimony of the negro boy, who passed the two unknown men just before the assault upon Mr. ROGERS was made, was taken by the Coroner, as well as some other evidence of an important character. As the Police had satisfied the Coroner they would be successful in making an arrest of the right men, if given proper time, he concluded to adjourn the inquest until the 19th inst. The representatives of the Press were requested to omit publication of the evidence taken by the Coroner yesterday, and the request was cheerfully acquiesced in by them, as the reticence may help to lead to the discovery of the murderers. Capt. CARPENTER stated that he felt confident of success in the matter, and it is to be sincerely hoped that he will be successful.

ELECTRICITY.—LECTURE BY PROF. DORREMUS.—Last evening Prof. DORREMUS delivered a lecture on "Electricity," at the College of New-York, before a crowded audience. After giving a number of beautiful experiments, the Professor displayed the magnesium, galvanic and electro-magnetic lights. "Why," he asked, "with the power to produce the powerful and beautiful lights, rivaling the sun in brilliancy, do we still continue to use the ordinary gas, and even oil lights?" He trusted that the time was not far distant when the practical man and the man of science would shake hands, and the discoveries of science be utilized. In this respect, he said, we are far behind European nations. The Professor stated, however, that the magnesium light is about to be introduced here on a large scale, a company having been formed for the purpose. The lecture concluded by a brilliant display of what may be called electric pyrotechnics.

A RAILROAD MYSTERY.—Mention has already been made in the TIMES that on New-Year's morning the mangled remains of an unknown man had been found on the up track of the Hudson River Railroad, near Fifty-sixth-street. The body was taken to the Morgue, and was yesterday identified as that of HUGH RYAN, aged 35, who resided, while alive, in Thirty-eighth-street. The relatives of the deceased admitted that RYAN had been intoxicated for several days, and his death may have been the result of accident. Coroner SCHIRMER will hold an inquest to-day.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.—JOSEPH PELL, a native of France, attempted to destroy his own life at an early hour yesterday morning, in front of his residence, No. 3 Grand-street, by deliberately shooting himself in the mouth with a pistol. Officer O'NEAL, of the Twenty-eighth Precinct, who was on post near by at the time, heard the pistol-shot, and ran up and took the weapon from PELL before he could do himself any further injury. Dr. SEBRING was called, and pronounced the wound not of a dangerous character.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF LONDON LIFE.—JOHN B. GOUGH will deliver the above-named lecture for the first time this season, at the Cooper Institute, tonight. This lecture is for the benefit of the Home for Old Persons of Both Sexes, which is supported by voluntary contributions, and contains now about eighty inmates. For the sake of this worthy charity, we hope there will be a full house.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—MR. MAURICE NANLY, of No. 89 Mulberry-street, who was knocked down and run over at the corner of Twenty-sixth-street and Third-avenue, on Monday, died yesterday at Bellevue Hospital. The remains were subsequently removed to late residence of the deceased, where Coroner SCLIMMER will hold an inquest to-day.

CITY CHAMBERLAIN'S OFFICE.—The City Chamberlain yesterday deposited in the Broadway Bank, to the credit of the City, $8,468 78, being the interest on public moneys received by him for the month of December, 1868, making a total of $107,529 51 deposited by him to his account during the past year.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

THIEVES SENT TO THE PENITENTIARY.—WM. SMITH, WM. SEAMAN and FRANK SEAMAN, who were arrested by Officer REED, of the Forty-sixth Precinct, for stealing twenty-six and a quarter yards of cassimere cloth from ULLMAN'S dry-goods store, corner of Ewen-street and Montrose-avenue, on the 29th ult., were taken before Justice EAMES on Monday. MR. ULLMAN identified the goods, which were stolen from the pawnbroker with whom they had been pledged by the thieves, and the Justice sent the trio to the Penitentiary for four months.

GRACE CHURCH ROBBED.—On Monday night Grace Church, in Conselyea-street, near Lorimer, E. D., was entered by thieves, who carried off forty yards of carpet of the value of $50. WM. F. HOYT was arrested on suspicion of having something to do with the theft, and Justice EAMES held him for examination. It appears that some time since a portion of the communion plate of the same church was stolen, and that HOYT professed to have had a hand in the sacrilegious operation.

PASSING COUNTERFEITS.—LOUIS REES was arrested by Officer REARDON yesterday on complaint of G. HAUGARTNER, baker, at the corner of Smith and Stagg streets, E. D., to whom it appears the accused offered a counterfeit United States note in payment for some cake; it appears also that he had attempted to pass the bill at some other stores. He was taken before United States Commissioner JONES, and held for examination.

BURNED TO DEATH.—SARAH DOHN, 50 years of age, who was employed in the rope-walk at the corner of Flushing and Graham avenues, having some tow about her waist, went into the boiler-room on Saturday, where the tow caught fire and burned her severely. She was taken to the City Hospital, and died on Sunday. The Coroner held an inquest, and a verdict of accidental burning was rendered.

DISTURBING PUBLIC WORSHIP.—DAWSON WOOD and ALBERT VERDER, young men, pleaded guilty before Justice CORNWELL, yesterday, of having repeatedly disturbed the services in the Mission Chapel, on the corner of Atlantic and Grand avenues. The complainant in the case was Rev. FRANKLIN NOBLE. At the request of the officers of the church, the prisoners were reprimanded and discharged.

GOLDEN WEDDINGS.—On Monday evening the Golden Wedding of Mr. and Mrs. ROBERT M. WHITING was celebrated at their residence in Cumberland-street. On Wednesday evening the Golden Wedding of Mr. and Mrs. LEMUEL LOPER, of Sweet Hollow, L. I., was duly celebrated.

BROOKLYN DISPENSARY.—During the year 1868 there were treated in the Brooklyn Dispensary 6,480 patients, and 12,633 prescriptions were gratuitously dispensed. Of the patients, 2,895 were natives of the United States, and 3,252 of Ireland.

SUDDEN DEATH AT THE NAVY-YARD.—DAVID HUTCHINGS, an employe at the Navy-yard, fell dead at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, just after he had started work.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY.—The amount received in contributions by the Treasurer of the Brooklyn Children's Aid Society since June 8, 1868, to Jan. 4, 1869, was $2,859 76.

LECTURES BY DR. BOYNTON.—DR. BOYNTON has been engaged to deliver a course of lectures at the Athenæum, in Atlantic-street, which will soon be commenced.

CONVICTED OF GRAND LARCENY.—THOS. JOHNSON was convicted in the Court of Sessions yesterday of having robbed THOMAS TEALEY of a $60 bill, and was remanded for sentence.

NEW-JERSEY.

ALMOST A SUICIDE.—At a late hour on Monday evening several residents in the vicinity of the house of Officer RICHARDS, of the Hoboken Police, which is situated in Garden-street, were alarmed by loud and angry cries proceeding from that locality. Upon proceeding to the house whence the noises emanated, the occupant, Officer RICHARDS, was found to be engaged in an angry altercation with his wife. All efforts to quiet him were unavailing, and he finally became so wild in his anger as to threaten to shoot himself. His threats were treated as the wild ravings of a severely intoxicated man by the persons who had congregated in his house, and when he attempted to go down cellar with the avowed object of putting his threat into execution, no effort was made to prevent him. Reports of pistol-shots were soon heard coming from the cellar, and the neighbors who had kindly endeavored to quiet him lost no time in making a descent. Instead of discovering a bleeding and lifeless corpse, however, the animated body of the policeman was seen elevated upon an empty vinegar barrel, with his revolver pointing in a direction which he evidently supposed was in line with his head. The contents of three barrels of his revolver were found scattered in different parts of the cellar, the surrounding darkness, as well as his own unsteadiness, having fortunately prevented the rash policeman from burying the bullets in his head. He was disarmed and taken to the Police Station, where he remained until the fumes of his too-potent libations had evaporated. Officer RICHARDS had been charged but a short time ago with drunkenness and misconduct, and was suspended. His term of suspension had nearly expired, but he will doubtless find a new obstacle to his reëstablishment in the one in consequence of this recent mad conduct.

GERMAN IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—A proposition to introduce German teachers in the public schools of Jersey City was brought up on Monday evening at a meeting of the Board of Education, by a report from the Committee which had been appointed at the last meeting of the Board to investigate the matter. The Committee strongly recommended the appointment of teachers for the scholars of German nativity who attend the public schools, stating that 1,500 German children, between the ages of 5 and 18 years, resided in Jersey City. Mayor O'NEILL, who was present, opposed the appointments of German teachers, as the tax-payers would thereby be compelled to bear an additional burden. The report of the Committee was finally laid on the table.

HOMICIDE IN HOBOKEN—COMMITTAL OF TWO OF THE PRISONERS.—The inquest on JOHN F. PASNELL, a sailor, recently killed at a German dance in Hoboken, was resumed yesterday evening before Coroner WHITE. Further evidence adduced was merely corroborative of what has been already published in the TIMES. The jury found the following verdict: "That, said JOHN PASNELL, came to his death on the 29th of December at a house in Grand-street, in the City of Hoboken; that he was struck and wounded by some blunt instrument in the hands of GUSTAVE HAUSMANN, and from said wounds he died; and we believe that AMIKE HAUSMANN is accessory to the fact." The two prisoners, brothers, were then removed in custody.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH.—A boy named JAMES GOOD, aged 11 years, was killed on the Erie Railway, near North Fourth-street, Jersey City, on Monday afternoon, while attempting to jump upon the platform of a car. He slipped between the cars by some means and was run over, receiving injuries from which he died within an hour. Coroner WARREN, last evening, held an inquest upon his body, when a verdict was returned in accordance with the above facts.

VERDICT OF CORONER'S JURY.—On Tuesday morning, Dec. 29, the body of a young man, named JOHN WARNOCK, was found quite dead in his room at his boarding-house, No. 55 Gregory-street, Jersey City. He had retired in good health on the evening preceding, and is was therefore supposed that he had committed deliberate suicide, as a bottle of laudanum was found on the table near his bed. At the inquest on his body, however, which was concluded at a late hour on Monday evening before Coroner WARREN, it was proved that the deceased was an habitual consumer of opium, and it therefore became a probability that his death resulted from an overdose taken unintentionally. A verdict was therefore rendered by the jury that the deceased came to his death by an overdose of laudanum, administered unintentionally by his own hand.

William, being taken into custody, was found in possession of several implements of burglary. This circumstance, coupled with his intrusion into the house, insured him a residence of six months in the Penitentiary.

A FATAL BALL TICKET.

A coat valued at $30 having been stolen from the office of the Astor House, a vain quest was made for the missing garment and the thief. Some time afterward one Thomas Kelly was found dead drunk in the street and thus fell into the hands of the Police. His person being searched he was found to have a ball ticket which had been in the pocket of the stolen coat. He was, therefore, sufficiently connected with the theft to receive a sentence of six months in the penitentiary.

CRUELTY TO HORSES.

Mr. Bergh made a complaint against Francis Curren, that he had driven a pair of horses utterly unfit for use, being covered with sores, from One Hundred and Sixty-sixth-street to Tiffany's, in Broadway, where the arrest was made. Taking into consideration the heavy roads and the long distance the horses had been made to travel, Curran was fined $15.

KINGS COUNTY COURT.

Before Judge Troy.

The case of Joseph Dollard, which has been on trial in the County Court before Judge TROY and the Associate Justices during the last two days, was ended yesterday by a verdict of "not guilty." The prisoner was charged with burglary and grand larceny, in breaking into the store of Messrs. DANIEL DEVEREUX & Co., in Williamsburg, on the night of the 21st of November last, and stealing clothing amounting in value to $2,000. The evidence offered by the prosecution established that on the afternoon of the 22d the prisoner was arrested in the City of New-York, having on his person three coats and in his possession three vests, with the store marks still on, all of which were identified as being part of the goods stolen. It was further shown that before the arrest was made the prisoner was seen by the officer to throw the three vests into a cellarway. Officer Gildersleeve swore that, to the best of his belief, he saw the prisoner at about 2 o'clock on the night of the burglary in Williamsburg, in the same street where the burglary occurred. Part of the stolen goods were subsequently found in the cellar of the premises occupied by the prisoner. Mr. T. B. Odell, of New-York, opened the case for the prisoner. It was proved for the defence that the prisoner was in his own bed on the night of the burglary, and that the goods were placed in the cellar by his sister, who had become anxious at the prolonged absence of her brother on the afternoon of his arrest. That about 4 o'clock on the morning of the arrest the goods were brought to the prisoner's room by one Larry Madden, who requested the prisoner to allow them to remain there until he in the day. It was further shown by a number of respectable witnesses that the prisoner was a young man of good character and of industrious habits.

John D. Townsend, Esq., of New-York, summed up for the prisoner, and District-Attorney Morris for the people. Both gentlemen spoke for more than an hour, and exhibited much tact and ability.

After a very clear and unbiased charge from Judge Troy, the jury retired, and after an absence of ten minutes returned with a verdict of "not guilty." This case was one of considerable interest, as the family of the prisoner are of respectable character, and much sympathy was felt for the prisoner by many persons of position.

TUESDAY, Jan. 6—P. M.

There was some let up in the Money market this Afternoon, although the pressure to borrow early in the day was quite as marked as on Saturday and Monday. The rates paid by the Brokers (including the Brokers of the Gold Room) were ½ ₱ cent. and Currency Interest per day; ½ ₱ cent. free of Interest; 7 ₱ cent. per annum in Gold, and finally 7 ₱ cent. per annum in Currency at the close of Bank hours. Most of the borrowers made up their accounts at an earlier hour than yesterday, and the consequence was that the course of supply was reversed. Independent of this circumstance, however, a number of the Banks appeared as lenders on the Public Funds, as well as buyers of the 5-20s at last night's cheaper prices. The prominent dealers did a large business over their own counters in the way of selling, and, on the other hand, were free buyers at the Exchange, to keep themselves in stock.

We have not heretofore noticed a practice attempted to be made common of buying and selling Money near the close of the day in the Long Room of the Stock Exchange, believing that the mischief would soon correct itself by the very transparent bubble character of many of these exceptional transactions, for effect on the Stock Market. But both Boards of Brokers were unwilling to tolerate it for a single week, and an order has been made forbidding their members to make open offers for Money, or to lend Money in either Board Room or in the Long Room of the Exchange Building.

The sales of Gold were at 134⅛@134⅜ ₱ cent. as against 135¼@135 ₱ cent. last night. High rates for Money to carry over Gold balances were paid up to 2 o'clock P. M., and the market looked weak on a continued offering from parties who had purchased or collected the January coupons upon the Public Debt. The Treasury paid out $622,000 Gold Interest and received $226,000 for Customs. At the close of the day the Gold Room showed more steadiness, and the sales were advanced to 135 ₱ cent. The Foreign Exchanges were also advanced to 109¾ for 60 days on London, and 110¼ short sight. Most of the actual sales for the mails for the Russia to-morrow, were at 109¾ ₱ cent. early in the day, but some credits were no doubt settled at the advanced rate. The Domestic Exchanges have turned in favor of New-York, at Chicago, but are less encouraging at New-Orleans, where the Discount on Bank Checks on New-York is ½ ₱ cent. The buoyancy in Cotton will probably, for a week or two, add to the orders to send Currency to the South, particularly to New-Orleans. From the West the remittances are this way.

As noted above, the business in the Public Funds was active, and the prices at the close of the day were better for all the 5-20s, except the old coupon '62s, which closed, as on Monday, at 111@111¼ ₱ cent. The general look of the market was firm at 4 o'clock, and the same may be said of the Border State Bonds, which showed considerable strength even in the forenoon, when Money was reported tight. The North Carolinas are again stronger, and the demand continues good for all the Louisianas, on the representations of the rapidly improving financial condition of the State in the Governor's Message. The City of New-Orleans has followed the good example of the State, and is now paying its coupons at the Chemical Bank in this City, under direction of the Southern Bank of New-Orleans.

The Railways were quite feverish through the day, influenced by the frequent changes in the sales of New-York Centrals, which ranged 152¼@155¼@153⅝@152¾@156¼@154¼ ₱ cent. The Injunction rumors about this Stock, so commonly circulated yesterday, are not confirmed, and the whole movement against the market, although said to have been countenanced yesterday by some of the old Bull speculators, would seem to resolve itself into an effort to cheapen the price for a fresh advance. The upward course of Fort Wayne stock was strong today, and Chicago and Rock Island, after receding 1@2 ₱ cent. last night and this morning, is again on the rise. The Northwests, Wabash, Michigan Southern, Pittsburg and St. Paul's were in good request.

After the late Boards broke up the following quotations were made as compared with Monday night. Reading should have been quoted Ex-Dividend in our last report. A million of 5-20s of 1867 sold at the close at 107¼@107¼ ₱ cent.:

☞ UNITED STATES SIX PER CENT. CURRENCY BONDS, 30 years to run, are offered for sale on favorable terms, at the office of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, No. 20 Nassau-st., New-York.

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

☞ THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY offers a limited amount of its First Mortgage Bonds at par. Nine hundred and sixty miles of the line west from Omaha are now completed, and the work is going on through the Winter. As the distance between the finished portion of the Union and Central Pacific Railroads is now less than 400 miles, and both Companies are pushing forward the work with great energy, employing over 30,000 men, there can be no doubt that the whole grand line to the Pacific will be open for business in the Summer of 1869. The regular Government Commissioners have pronounced the Union Pacific Railroad to be first-class in every respect, and the Special Commission appointed by the President says:

"Taken as a whole, THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD HAS BEEN WELL CONSTRUCTED, AND THE GENERAL ROUTE FOR THE LINE EXCEEDINGLY WELL SELECTED. The energy and perseverance with which the work has been urged forward, and the rapidity with which it has been executed, are without parallel in history, and in grandeur and magnitude of undertaking it has never been equaled."

Besides a donation from the Government of 12,800 acres of land per mile, the Company is entitled to a subsidy in United States Bonds on its lines as completed and accepted, at the average rate of about $29,000 per mile, according to the difficulties encountered, for which the Government takes a second lien as security. The Company has already received $24,078,000 of this subsidy, being in full on the 940 miles that have been examined by the United States' Commissioners.

GOVERNMENT AID—SECURITY OF THE BONDS.

By its charter, the Company is permitted to issue its own FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS to the same amount as the Government Bonds, and no more. These Bonds are a First Mortgage upon the whole road and all its equipments. Such a mortgage upon what, for a long time, will be the only railroad connecting the Atlantic and Pacific States, takes the highest rank as a safe security.

The price for the present is PAR, and accrued interest at 6 per cent. from July 1, 1868, in currency.

Subscriptions will be received in New-York at the Company's office, No. 20 Nassau-street, and by JOHN J. CISCO & SON, Bankers, No. 59 Wall-street, and by the Company's advertised agents throughout the United States.

Pamphlets, with full particulars, on application. Bonds sent free, but parties subscribing through local agents will look to them for their safe delivery.

JOHN J. CISCO, Treasurer, New-York.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

A dispatch from London announces that severe earthquake shocks were felt in the neighborhood of Tabreeze, Persia, on Sunday last. No serious damage resulted. It is asserted by a Paris newspaper that Russia urges the meeting of the Peace Conference, because she is anxious to prevent the expulsion of Greeks from Turkey, and says if the question is introduced the Turkish representative will leave the Conference.

Four of the insurgents at Malaga, Spain, who fired upon some refugees while under the protection of the American flag, were promptly punished by the General in command of that city. A Carlist conspiracy had been discovered in Barcelona and Saragossa, and many arrests have taken place. In Andalusia, many peasants have been driven by poverty to become freebooters, and have organized regular bands to plunder wealthy landholders.

CONGRESS.

The Senate assembled at the usual hour yesterday. The presiding officer presented communications from the Secretary of War relative to the number of troops engaged in service against the Indians, and from the Secretary of the Treasury inclosing the report of D. A. WELLS, Special Revenue Commissioner. A number of petitions were presented and referred. Mr. FERRY offered a resolution requesting the President to forward a copy of his late Amnesty Proclamation, with a statement of the authority by which it was issued. Mr. FERRY stated that while he was in favor of the proclamation he doubted the authority of the President to issue it. After some debate, during which several Republican Senators pronounced the proclamation an assumption of power on the part of the Executive, the resolution was adopted. Mr. WILSON introduced a bill providing for the issue and redemption of a national currency, which was referred to the Committee on Finances. The bill for the relief of SUE MURPHY, of Alabama, for losses sustained by the war, was taken up and gave rise to a lengthy debate. Without disposing of the bill the Senate, after a brief Executive Session adjourned.

Immediately upon the assembling of the House Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, reported from the Committee on Appropriations the bill making appropriations for consular and diplomatic expenses. The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole, to be taken up to-day as the special order, and so continued until disposed of. Mr. WASHBURNE offered a preamble and resolution reciting the facts set forth in the report of Mr. BALL, special Post Office agent, to the effect that WELLS, FARGO & Co. had neglected to convey the overland mails in accordance with their contract, but had left them exposed to the weather along the route, and directing the Postmaster-General to make no further payments to said contractors until these charges shall have been investigated. Objection was made to the consideration of the resolution at the present time. Mr. LYNCH, as a question of privilege, made an explanation relative to the newspaper charges made against him allering that he had used his frank to circulate newspapers. He admitted that he had franked many papers containing his speeches, and that he should continue to do so. Mr. JONES introduced a preamble and resolution setting forth that the resolutions recently passed in both Houses censuring the President for the financial recommendations contained in his message were an infringement of the rights of the Executive, and directing that 100,000 copies of the Message be printed for general distribution. Objection was made, and the resolution was not received. The House went into Committee of the Whole to consider the President's Message of 1867, and Mr. WINDOM made a speech on the subject of the Northern Pacific Railroad. At the conclusion of his remarks the Committee rose and the House adjourned.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

The Senate was called to order yesterday by Lieut.-Gov. BRADY, who made a short address, after which a committee was appointed to inform the Governor and the Assembly that the Senate was duly organized. The Governor's Message was received and read, after which the Senate adjourned.

The Assembly was called to order by the Clerk of the last session, and immediately proceeded to ballot for Speaker, which resulted in the election of TRUMAN G. YOUNGLOVE, of Saratoga. On taking the chair Mr. YOUNGLOVE made a short address, after which Mr. E. F. UNDERHILL was chosen Clerk. Other officers were then selected and committees appointed to notify the Governor and Senate that the Assembly was ready for business. The Governor's Message was received and read by the Clerk. After the usual drawing for seats, a resolution proposing an adjournment from Thursday to the following Wednesday was laid on the table and the House adjourned.

GENERAL.

The three negroes who were sentenced to be hanged at Princess Anne, Md., on Friday, the 8th inst., for the murder of Capt. JOHNSON and his mate, CANNON, in Tangier Sound, in March last, have been respited to March 5, to await the trial of their companion, VARLEY, which will begin next week.

At a meeting of the Boston Board of Trade, on Monday, Mr. EDWARD ATKINSON introduced a series of resolutions against the Moorhead Tariff bill, the most important of which declares that "the increase proposed in said bill, in the taxes upon iron, steel and other metals, upon lumber, upon alkalies, upon glass and upon salt, are especially uncalled for, and would tend to enhance the excessive cost of the production of almost all other commodities, already so high as to have nearly destroyed our foreign commerce, and seriously to impair the comfort and prosperity of the people." The resolutions are to be considered at a special meeting on Saturday.

At a recent town meeting the people of Saratoga accepted the offer of a library from Hon. THOS. B. CARROLL, and resolved to erect a suitable building for its accommodation, and in connection with it a town hall, to cost from $50,000 to $75,000.

MANUEL SMITH, the colored man arrested for the murder of a street-car driver named BRADLEY and his son, while on a car in New-Orleans, a few days ago, has been acquitted.

ELISHA E. RUSSELL, master of the whaling schooner D. W. Richards, of New-Bedford, was convicted in the United States Court, at Boston, yesterday, of assaulting one of his crew. He was also charged with withholding food from the crew, but the jury acquitted him of that indictment.

Mrs. TWITCHELL, of Philadelphia, who is charged with being the accomplice of her husband in the murder of her mother, yesterday made an appeal to the Court asking for a speedy trial. She protests her innocence. The Court fixed Monday, the 18th inst., as the time for commencing her trial.

The Boston Evening Traveller reports that Mr. LANDER, Postmaster of Salem, who has not been at his office for a week, is a defaulter to the amount of $15,000 or $20,000.

A paper printed at Helena, Montana, says that in one of the famous mines in that district there are 1,000 tons of excellent ore ready to be crushed, and 10,000 tons of equally good quartz in sight, and that the lodge contains quartz worth $5,000,000.

The Board of Excise met yesterday and passed upon fourteen cases of violation of the Liquor law by dealers. Seven cases were postponed and two licenses were revoked.

From the report of the Croton Department for 1868 it appears that $1,319,544 26 were received for water rents, &c., being $55,676 95 more than in 1867. During the year six miles and five hundred and seventy-two feet of water pipes were laid.

Yesterday the Metropolitan Board of Health met and transacted a lengthy course of business. It was resolved to remove the slaughter houses from below Fortieth-street at once. The United States Consul at Malta complained in an official letter that vessels were accustomed to leave that port without bills of health from him, and the Board ordered the Health Officer to investigate the matter. The Registrar of Vital Statistics reported that during the past week there were 367 deaths, 382 births, and 112 marriages in this City, and 188 in Brooklyn. During the past year there were 24,889 deaths in New-York. The Board will meet hereafter on Mondays instead of Tuesdays.

The annual meeting of the New-York Historical Society was held last evening at the hall of the Society, corner of Eleventh-street and Second-avenue. In the absence of the President, Mr. SCHELL, Chairman of the Executive Committee, was called to the Chair. The annual reports were submitted, from which it appears the Society is in a flourishing condition. All the officers of the Society were unanimously reelected.

The Ninth Regiment, National Guard, New-York State, gave their annual ball last night at the Academy of Music. It was very brilliant, and numerously attended.

Prof. DOREMUS lectured last evening at the College of New-York, on electricity.

The steamship Europe, from Havre Dec. 17 and Brest Dec. 19, reached this port yesterday. Capt. LEMAIRE has our thanks for late Paris papers.

Cotton sold quite freely yesterday at a further advance in prices. Breadstuffs and Provisions were attracting more attention, and were quoted much stronger in the leading instances. Groceries inactive. Freights lower, on a moderate business.

The Industry and Capital of the Country—Report of Mr. Wells.

We had frequent occasion, at the beginning of last year, to refer to the very great value of the annual report (it was then the second) of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue, Mr. DAVID A. WELLS.

The report he has made this year,—and of which we give nearly the whole to-day,—will be found no less suggestive and valuable, no less clear, strong and accurate, no less instructive to Congress and interesting to the country at large, than that of last year. We shall doubtless have occasion, from time to time, to discuss its principles and propositions, and at present will only refer to its leading features and points.

Mr. WELLS is not an optimist, in the sense of seeking to put a favorable face on everything that presents itself, and yet he always shows himself to be possessed, in a large degree, of the strong American characteristic of hope,—which bases itself on a vigorous faith in the national character, an intelligent knowledge of the national condition, and a firm belief in the predominance and assured triumph of those visible and invisible elements of national power which have always asserted themselves whenever they were necessary to the national life. He is no theorist, after the fashion of those whom NAPOLEON hated as ideologists; but, on the contrary, as he himself says, he institutes investigations for the purpose of reaching facts, and seeks rather to determine, through the collection of positive data, the legislative policy that will be advantageous to the country's industry and the public revenues. In thus applying the Baconian method to these questions, he has been able, in his several reports, to furnish Congress a body of suggestions eminently worthy of their consideration.

In opening his views on the present condition of the capital and industry of the country, he shows, on the one hand, the indications that the country is resuming its wonderful career of progress and development; and, on the other hand, he shows that agencies are in existence which tend to arrest or obstruct the national advancement. The favorable signs are such as these: (1) The large immigration of the last few years; (2) the general increase in the products of domestic industry; (3) the continued increase in agricultural productions, whether measured by quantity or value; (4) railway and telegraphic extension. On all these points he furnishes statistics and facts, which constitute the very best kind of argument.

In discussing the agencies concerned in the national development, he treats of our great natural resources, and the free institutions which permit their untrammeled development. In regard to the relation of special legislation to the growth of industry, he holds that we require but little of it; and on this point he gives some facts for the high-tariff men that they will find somewhat difficult of digestion. After remarking that all investigation shows that the facts are entirely contrary to what may be regarded as the popular belief, which, indeed, in this particular, would appear to be based on little else than mere assertions, which, remaining for a long time unquestioned, have at last acquired the force of accepted historical truth,—he shows that the tariff of 1842 did not, as has been constantly asserted, stimulate the production of pig iron, and then brings forward data in regard to ship-building, the production of coal and cotton, railroad construction, &c., which strengthen his position. He sums up in the following striking words the lesson which is derived from the study of all the facts pertaining to national development:

"The progress of the country through what we may term the strength of its elements of vitality is independent of legislation, and even of the impoverishment and waste of a great war. Like one of our own mighty rivers, its movement is beyond control. Successive years, like successive affluents, only add to and increase its volume; while legislative enactments and conflicting commercial policies, like the construction of piers and the deposit of sunken wrecks, simply deflect the current, or constitute temporary obstructions. In fact, if the nation has not yet been lifted to the full comprehension of its own work, it builds determinately, as it were, by instinct."

The results of the war constitute the per contra upon the national ledger which shows the development of industry. Reference is made to the greatly increased cost of nearly all forms of labor and commodities, while this is regarded as the resultant mainly of three agencies growing out of the war, viz.: irredeemable paper currency, unequal and heavy taxation, and a limited supply of skilled labor, the last manifesting itself at the present time in specialties rather than in general. These points, actual and comparative, are very elaborately discussed, on the basis of long and careful investigations in respect to the retail prices of the leading articles of domestic consumption by operatives in different sections and States of the country. Nowhere else have we anything like as full and reliable statistics as Mr. WELLS furnishes on these matters. He gives tables showing the average aggregate weekly earnings of families in 1867, the average weekly expenditure of families, and the average weekly expenditures of laboring men at different periods for articles of household necessity. From a vast mass of data he comes to the conclusion that whether we adopt money or flour as the standard for the comparison of wages and commodities, in 1860 and 1867, the result is not dissimilar, viz.: the purchasing power of the irredeemable paper money now in use is not nearly equal to what it was in the immediate ante-war years of 1860-'61; and that the working men and women of the country do not now receive as much in return for their labor as before the war. The result of the whole has been that the rich have become richer and the poor poorer.

Mr. WELLS then discusses taxation as it exists (1) under the internal revenue, (2) under the tariff, (3) under State and local laws. We have only time, at this moment, to commend his views here given on protection and the tariff to the consideration of all our readers, whatever be the views they may have adopted; and we venture to say that high-tariff men, as well as free-traders, will find ideas and facts which will furnish them food for thought during the rest of the year.

Having fully surveyed the productive development and industrial position of the country, and the comparative condition of workers and capitalists, Mr. WELLS comes to the financial state and policy of the country. He analyzes the national receipts and expenditures, and shows where retrenchment may be effected. He discusses resumption, and refunding at a lower rate of interest; and he indicates the means by which he believes the national credit may be elevated and taxation reduced. He closes with some excellent suggestions regarding the reduction of tariff duties and the simplification of our revenue system.

We have read none of the public documents recently issued from the different Departments of the Government with so deep an interest as this. We have found none of them in the various parts of which we could so fully agree. We have found none of them in which the facts were more carefully collected or set forth with equal clearness and intelligence. There is none of them equally deserving of popular study, or in which questions are so admirably brought within popular comprehension.

The Government and the Telegraph.

At the recent banquet given to Prof. MORSE, reference was very properly made by at least one of the speakers to the proposition which has been advanced in some quarters to place the telegraph under the control of the Government. It was stated, furthermore, that the only bill pending before Congress providing for such control did not contemplate acquiring the present system of lines, but proposed to commence the construction of new lines by putting up one of four wires between this City and Washington. This is the plan of which Hon. Mr. WASHBURN is the father, and for the purpose of collecting information for its development he is understood to have made a special trip to Europe a year ago. We would be glad to have him inform us in what European country he found the precedent for his scheme to appropriate the public money to enable the Government to embark in a competition with its own citizens.

It was certainly not in England, for although the British Government has decided to make the telegraph a department of the postal service, its first movement in that direction was to open negotiations for the purchase of all the existing lines. The result of these negotiations is an agreement to sell to the Government for a sum equal to twenty times the net profits of the present year, such profits to be ascertained by Commissioners appointed for that purpose.

This appears to be a liberal arrangement toward the telegraph owners, and one which our companies would undoubtedly be willing to accept; and yet it is no more than any Government should be ready to give in consideration of the perpetual surrender by its citizens of their right to profit by investments in a business which is destined to become of such immense importance as the telegraph. But we are opposed to the assumption of private enterprises by our Government on any terms. There can be nothing pleaded in justification, unless it be public necessity. In the case of the telegraph no such necessity exists. Certainly there is no lack of facilities between this City and the national capital. On this route three rival companies have been operating competing lines for several years, and a fourth is now erecting another set. Either possesses facilities equal to those proposed in the Washburne bill, and one of them vastly greater. Nor are the charges on this route excessive. Two of the companies have thus far been unable to make any dividends, and the ability of the third to do so, at low rates, cannot have been materially assisted by the profits on the business between these points.

Mr. WASHBURNE proposes to make the tariff on his line fifteen cents for ten words, instead of forty cents, the rate now charged. Is the mere difference of twenty-five cents per message in favor of those having occasion to use the telegraph between these points a consideration of such importance as to justify the Government in expending a large sum directly, and, perhaps, indirectly destroying existing property which cost vastly more? But he will probably answer, this is to be an experiment to test the practicability of operating the telegraph by the Government at low rates. Then why not try the experiment where the results will prove something? Men of largest experience in the management of the telegraph claim that their business is mainly dependent on trade and commerce, and that merely personal and social communications constitute but a small item in the aggregate number of messages; that a small manufacturing town will give greater returns than another of much larger population but less enterprising in trade. An experiment to test the correctness of these opinions might claim consideration if it were to be instituted between places to which private enterprise denied the telegraph, on the ground that it could not be made to pay. But we are inclined to coincide in the above opinion, and to believe that the lines under private control will everywhere follow closely the demands of business at all points which promise even moderate profits. We believe, however, that the companies will find it for their interest to offer the public lower average rates; first, because the business will thereby increase more rapidly, and secondly because the operation of competing lines, which will be constructed to meet the demand for lower rates, will, by dividing their receipts, diminish their profits more than would probably result from liberal reductions in advance of competition.

Gov. Hoffman's Message.

Gov. HOFFMAN has sent into the Legislature an elaborate and valuable message, discussing the usual subjects of general and special interest,—the finances, the canals, the State prisons, the banks, the questions of education, public charitable institutions, immigration, quarantine, and public health, the cattle disease, the militia, and the relations of the State to the City of New-York, including the matters of excise laws, municipal government, and "the purity of elections." He even finds space to protest against "Federal centralization;" but he might have spared his parting fling, which is both unnecessary and in bad taste, against Congress, for "having directed its efforts to the suppression of representation and the subversion of republican government in the States."

Beginning with the customary summary of the finances and indebtedness of the State, Gov. HOFFMAN tells us that the net amount of the State's indebtedness at the end of the fiscal year (i. e., Sept. 30, 1868) was "only $38,864,448 74." It, therefore, becomes obvious that, as over $6,000,000 balances of sinking funds have accumulated applicable to the redemption of the debt, at this rate, the sinking funds will extinguish the whole debt within nine years.

Touching the canals, it appears that the present balance of the canal fund is $4,698,922 44, as against $3,840,935 66 for the year previous; and that the canal revenues for 1868 were nearly half a million in excess of those of 1867, and their current expenses nearly $200,000 less than the recent annual average. The surplus revenue has been sufficient to pay the balance of the canal debt of 1846 and to contribute over $100,000 "to defray the necessary expenses of the Government." The Governor touches somewhat diplomatically on the dangerous question of "canal policy," but announces himself as being in favor of "thorough repair," and especially of having the water-way restored to its full dimensions, and even incidentally and progressively enlarged. With the State Engineer, he considers the present system of repairs to be a dead failure.

Of our prison system, he says that it "abounds in evils and errors," and that he is "satisfied the prisons can be better managed, as well in respect to finances as discipline." He thinks that agents, wardens and keepers "have too often been selected from political considerations only;" that the contract system for prisoners' labor injures discipline, and does not pay; and that convict labor should be entirely directed by the Prison Superintendents, and its fruits sold for the benefit of the State. He adds the very judicious suggestion that a small portion of the prisoner's earnings should be laid aside for his benefit, to be paid when he is discharged, by way of incentive to good conduct and to hope for the future. True public policy, as well as philanthropy, approves this wise recommendation. Under this head, also, the Governor takes strong ground against the outrageous practice of detaining in jail witnesses in criminal cases, when unable to give security for their appearance at the trial of the accused. Poor strangers, friendless, often with families dependent on them, they are made the victims of crime, and are often left in prison while the alleged criminal is at large on bail! It is suggested that here is a good field for remedial legislation.

The Governor says nothing of insurance, and little of banks; but he notes, with evident satisfaction, the case of the Albany bank that "has evinced its confidence in the free banking system of the State of New-York, by returning to it from the national system." As to the militia, we are told it is "sound and prosperous," being now between 25,000 and 30,000 strong, and mainly consisting of the fifty regiments and three battalions of infantry, with very much smaller forces of artillery and cavalry. The Governor says he will aim to still further reduce the expenses of the National Guard, without impairing its efficiency.

The message urges the immediate building of the new Capitol on the site now fixed upon. It recommends an amendment of the Cattle Disease law of 1866, to increase its efficiency. Regarding the Quarantine, the Governor believes in the stability of the foundation laid for the West Bank Hospital, but "suggests an addition to the rip raps for further security;" and he also asks legislation for the other quarantine structure on West Bank, since begun. He notes a decline of the arrival of 213,708 alien immigrants during the year, and the decrease of 29,023 from 1867—attributable, he thinks, to unsettled politics, and to the efforts of other States to attract immigration by direct steam communication to Europe.

As to the codes, Gov. HOFFMAN recommends "an immediate reform in our criminal laws," and particularly a statute, (this is an interesting point,) whereby a jury may render, in a case of homicide not, in their opinion, deserving death, a verdict of murder of a less degree, to be punished by imprisonment for a term of years, the maximum to be fixed by laws.

To the relations of the State and City of New-York the Governor devotes the most careful and elaborate part of his message. His ground, of course, can be anticipated. He holds the creation of the "Metropolitan District" to be a clear violation of the State Constitution, and (though probably not very confidently) he "recommends the repeal of the present law" creating the district. At great length he then urges the injustice wrought in depriving the "local authorities" of New-York, Brooklyn, &c., of sundry powers formerly held by them; and he particularly recommends the repeal of the Excise law, as being a needless, arbitrary, unwise and despotic enactment. Here he also asks for legislation for the New-York wharves and piers. Then, with rather a virtuous indignation, the Governor eloquently appeals for "purity of the ballot," denounces illegal voting, "and demands that the corrupt use of money in elections should be severely punished."

From this point Gov. HOFFMAN diverges into national politics, protesting against vesting in Congress the control of suffrage in the States, and against putting obstacles in the way of naturalization; and with these and some general words deprecating party violence, the Message closes. Let us trust that our new Governor will have firmness and patriotism enough to give us what he promises, so far as he is concerned, to give—"the blessings of an economical, a prudent, and a wise Government."

Government Aid to Railroads and to the Port of New-York.

It is well understood that there is an immense pressure at Washington to secure, between now and the 4th of March, enactments that will give millions of acres of the public land to railway projects, and that members of Congress are the most active, if not the most interested, agents in carrying through these schemes. The public lands have not all been given away to Western States and to Western improvements: but one-half of them, as they have become accessible and marketable, have. It has been computed that lands belonging to the people of all the States and as much the property of the Eastern as of Western States, to the amount of more than one hundred millions of dollars in value, have been given away to Western interests. And now we see a new brood of schemes pressed upon Congress, which will leave nothing of these lands to the people except the right to survey and map them at the public expense.

If the 4th of March can be reached before the title of the people to the public lands is lost, we need not have much anxiety for their future safety. The veto of Gen. GRANT will effectually stop these plundering schemes, and hence it is that the hungry in and outside of Congress are making their last and desperate attack on the nation's resources, in the hope of carrying off the spoils before the 4th of March.

The City and Port of New-York contributes nearly as much to the support of the Government as all the rest of the Union put together. Not only does it do this, but to promote the iron interests of Pennsylvania, and the manufacturing interests of New-England, the foreign shipping and carrying trade of New-York has been destroyed by Congressional action. Thus, to the East of us, and to the West of us, the Government, by direct donations and by favoring legislation, has been giving countless millions, while all this City and Port receives from Congress is the privilege of paying the bills to advance these local interests and sustain the Government.

Our East River is the commercial maelstrom of this westerly continent. The most important area of the Union, it is the least improved, and is, in the development of its commercial facilities and commercial capacities, in as primitive a condition as any portion of the wilderness lying between the Mississippi and the Pacific. Its rocks and reefs and whirlpools, in the gateway of our national port, have been a disgrace to us as a commercial nation for at least a half-century past.

These grants of land and money to aid railroads find their only authority in the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States. There is more of this foreign commerce and of the commerce of the several States passing through the East River in one day, than will ever pass over any or all of the Pacific Railroads in a week.

We have, therefore, a right to demand, in view of the enormous contributions which this City has made in the past, and is now making toward the financial sustenance of the Government, in view of the enormous donations to the other portions of the country, and of none here, that for every acre of land and dollar of money that may be given between now and the 4th of March to aid a commercial enterprise in any other part of the Union, another acre, and another dollar, shall be set apart to improve the Port and Harbor of New-York. If the Congressional delegation from this State shall prove faithful to its interests and to the interests of their constituents, either these schemes for Government aid will fail, or New-York will get some small share of what is due to it from the nation.

The Prevalence of Crime and the Moral of the Murders.

We gave an elaborate account lately of the remarkable poisoning cases at Marseilles, France, as an illustration of the very general prevalence of crime and the very singular administration of justice in France. We have lately had in this country a series of crimes not less remarkable, and they have served to illustrate more than one of the absurdities of the law as enforced, or rather as not enforced in America.

The late assassination of H. RIVES POLLARD, and the wholesale massacre of the RENOS in the New-Albany (Indiana) jail, are painful evidences not only of an increasing disregard for human life, but a growing irreverence for the laws of the country. In the one case a whole community openly applauded a most cowardly assassination; in the other an entire community turned assassins, and breaking open the public jail, executed suspected criminals surrendered for trial by a neighboring friendly Power, with the expressed understanding that they were to have a fair trial. It is no excuse to say that in both instances the victims were dangerous characters, and that justice only was dealt out to them. For the sake of the argument we might admit as much. The outrages—the crimes of young GRANT and the Richmond people who applauded him, and that of the Seymour Vigilance men—were not so much against the dead victims as the living laws and those for whose protection they were enacted. The law cannot be thus violated, and the violators go unpunished, without losing its sanctity and power. Other individuals and gangs of men will be incited by the success of GRANT and the Seymour men to similar acts, in revenge for real or fancied wrongs at the hands of known or suspected persons; and thus will be brought about a system of mob law, as horrible in its enforcement as the crime it proposes to punish. The offence of POLLARD, gross enough, it is true, was innocence compared to that of GRANT; and all the evil deeds of RENO and his companions are as nothing compared to the heinous crime of their assassins. In both these cases it is the living law-abiding public, not the dead criminals and slanderer, who are outraged; and it is the living who demand the trial and punishment of these violators of the law which should be the protection of all.

The murder of Mr. ROGERS in front of his residence in Twelfth-street, within a block of the busiest thoroughfare of this City, in broad daylight, is a most painful illustration of the ineffectiveness of our Police organization as a preventive force—a fact we have more than once presented in these columns. Mr. ROGERS was deliberately attacked in the open street by an armed ruffian, while another stood guard near by and looked on; after being stabbed he was robbed of his watch and pocket-book; and the murderers walked off with their booty and remain unapprehended to this day. No policeman was in sight or hearing, and in explanation of this fact, the Police Captain in charge of the district states that his force on the morning of the murder was so small that each officer had twice his usual ground to watch. In other words, the force, as we have long known and frequently stated, is totally inadequate to prevent crime. In this instance it has been less effective than usual in detecting the criminals. It is apparent from the boldness of the attack that the criminals knew the whereabouts of the Police officers; but the Police do not seem to have seen or known anything of the criminals. This case has, also, an illustration of the operation of the law which will not be understood or appreciated by all. A man living in the vicinity of the murder hears that he is suspected of having committed it, and at once repairs to the nearest Station-house and delivers himself into custody, declaring his innocence. He is taken before the wounded man, who declares positively that he is not the man who injured him, nor his companion who looked on. Still the man is held as a prisoner,—on what grounds it is difficult to imagine.

Early on New-Year's morning a gang of five rowdies, who had been gambling and drinking all night in the public saloon of the St. Barnard House, in this City, became enraged, and at once began firing at each other, to the imminent danger of all others in the saloon and of the passers by in the street. They were arrested and taken to prison, where they were locked up in one cell, or at least in cells communicating; for it appears that during their brief imprisonment of a few hours, their blood being cooled, they arranged a treaty of peace for their mutual protection and the defeat of the law. And, singularly enough, their weak invention for this purpose succeeded. On being arraigned they one and all declared they had no charge to make against each other; and so were discharged! Nothing at once more ridiculous or flagrant can be conceived than such a dénouement to such an outrage. Only the criminals themselves seem to have had any recognized rights in the Court; the offended public were unrepresented by Police or prosecuting attorney, and the criminals were discharged because they did not choose to prosecute each other for the crime against the public which they had jointly committed. A distinguished prisoner lately escaped from the clutches of the law on the plea of momentary insanity; a great many more seem to be escaping through the insanity—or something worse—of the legal authorities.

From Canada comes another late illustration of the ignorance and unreasonableness of jurors. A man named JONES was accused of murdering his niece, and was convicted, not because there was any real evidence against him, but because the jury saw a motive for the deed in the enmity existing between the prisoner and the father of the victim. During the trial the prisoner's daughter confessed that she alone had committed the murder, and stated that her father knew nothing of the deed for hours after it was done. The jury, however, disregarded the confession, as far as it exculpated the father, and found him guilty of murder in the first degree. At the same time it accepted the confession as far as it implicated the girl herself, and condemned her to ten years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary. The man was hung, protesting his innocence; the girl was remanded to prison, declaring her guilt!

We are having just now what some of our contemporaries used to delight in calling "an epidemic of crime." Murders simply horrible in themselves, and without other moral than the degeneracy of the age, are occurring every day. We have murders with motives and without; murders committed in moments of passion and expiated by immediate suicide; murders prompted by avarice, jealousy, and all the other passions, and also by political and social questions. All classes of society are implicated; all the various and varied communities of the different States are involved, and criminal trials and executions are occurring in all districts of the country. Public opinion and the organized authorities appear to be alike disregarded; and every evidence displayed of a disrespect for the laws. Crime is committed with a singular publicity, little effort being made at concealment, and criminals do not appear any longer to dread that the laws will be enforced against them. The evil tendency of all this can be readily imagined. We are hastening in this way to a dangerous condition of society,—a condition in which the protection which the laws no longer afford will be sought by those illegal organizations which have at different times appeared in various disorganized communities, and which invariably become greater abuses than those which they were intended to correct.

The best check and cure for these epidemics of crime have generally been found in the hands of the Judges of our criminal courts, and a few sensible and earnest Grand Juries, under charges from as many sensible Judges, awake to the necessity of vigorous action against criminals, will form a most admirable preventive power, and put a sudden end to criminal excesses. It is the demoralization and laxity of the law which produces the demoralization of society, and the law must be enforced before society can be reformed.

MINOR TOPICS.

Congress reassembled yesterday. The brief session of eight weeks ought not only to be a busy session, but a fruitful one. There is plenty of good work before it, and there are any quantity of corrupt, foolish and ruinous schemes before it. We shall see which of these calls out most effort and labor.

Mr. YOUNGLOVE was yesterday elected Speaker of the House at Albany, and the fact has already been telegraphed abroad as favorable to the chances of FENTON as against MORGAN in the contest for United States Senator. But it is a fortnight till the Senatorial election; and who can tell what may happen in a fortnight?

We think Mayor HALL acted wisely in not sending a message to the Common Council on the first day of his accession to office. It seems to have occurred to him, first of all our Mayors, that no man could be expected to know intuitively all about City affairs, and that it would be better to wait until he had had a chance to study the subject a little before he undertook to enlighten the world about it. Mr. HALL is a man of great practical good sense, and is not likely to talk nonsense when he does send in a message. We hope he will tell us a few of the many things which the City needs, and then suggest some way of getting them. He can help us to one,—if he has a mind to,—and that is, a good Mayor. Suppose he tries?

The dwellers down town are reduced to the lowest pitch of wretchedness, as will be readily conceded when it is understood that they actually deplore the demolition of the Loew bridge! But it is next to impossible to cross Broadway at Fulton-street, or indeed anywhere else, without being run over by vehicles or smothered in slush, or both; and bad as it was architecturally and otherwise, the Loew bridge did make it possible to escape these disasters. The wisdom and good sense of the Common Council in ordering the destruction of that bridge at the only period when it could possibly be of use, commands, as it ought, general admiration.

In the name of thousands of respectable but powerless men, women and children, whose wants are entitled to consideration, we appeal to all our ferry corporations for the prompt performance of a simple duty. The crosswalks leading from the ferry gates, in these days of thaw, are entirely overflowed and hidden by the vile and pasty slush. It would be a small matter to keep them clear, as they are mainly contiguous to the culverts; but even if the case were otherwise it is the bound duty of the ferry people to afford their patrons a decent passage to and from the ferry gates. We are glad to see that Mr. WHITING is making some attempt to divert the semi-liquid accumulations of Broadway into the culverts by opening the gutters. He might do more in this direction. The Police, also, are remiss in not enforcing the law which requires the choked gutters to be kept clear by the occupants of buildings. Does this neglect grow out of laxity in the office of the Corporation Counsel in prosecuting complaints? By a very small effort on the part of all concerned we would be speedily relieved of the tribulations which now beset us all.

We actually saw a policeman yesterday take a broom in his hands and help clear an overflowing gutter, so as that the water could run off, and foot passengers cross the street without danger of drowning. What increase of salary a policeman who has so practical a sense of duty, and who is so ready to do it, deserves, we can scarcely imagine. Would $25,000 a year be too much? Considering the number of men who want to be policemen, we should answer Yes:—but considering the very small number who are inclined to imitate his example for any smaller sum, we should say No. We commend his case to the reflections of the "ring."

In view of the dilemma in which Congress might have found itself in dealing with the general question of reconstruction in Georgia, it is very pleasant to get even the telegraphic rumor that the Legislature of that State proposes to pass resolutions declaratory of its willingness to abide by the decision of the Supreme Court of the State or of the United States upon the point at issue. Reconstruction would be very embarrassing. The Georgians seem about to be blessed with returning sense.

The Duke of Buckingham did a very shabby thing by the Canadians before leaving office. The supply of Barronetcies and Knight-Commanderships of the Bath at the disposal of the British Government being utterly insufficient to meet the views of the aspiring politicians of the new Dominion, some plan had to be devised by which the coveted affix of "Sir" might be more liberally conferred. But instead of creating a new order of colonial knighthood, which might easily have been done, His Grace of Buckingham has vamped up the old Order of St. Michael and St. George, belonging to his Order, formerly under British protectorate, but ceded to Greece several years ago. It is to be enlarged and remodeled, and its Grand Crosses, Knight-Commanderships and Companionships are to be conferred on all who have earned marked distinctions in Colonial politics, in the Dominion and elsewhere. So the Canadians, for whom, of course, the lion's share of the new titular dainty is intended, will, we hope, duly and reverently honor St. Michael and St. George in company with the Sir Spiridons and Sir Demetrius of the late Septinsular Republic.

The reply of Col. EMMONS CLARK, of the Seventh Regiment, to the circular inviting his command to a contest for the championship of the First Division, refusing the challenge, is characterized by a great deal of good sense, which may be epitomized as follows: 1. The regiment does not desire to hold any emblem signifying its superiority over other organizations. Its members are content to do their duty according to their best ability, and the approbation of the public is their sufficient reward. 2. Competition of the sort proposed invariable produces bad blood, jealousies and heart-burnings. 3. Permanent injury is entailed upon any regiment which lends itself to contests for excellence in drill, because injustice is done to individual members in taxing their time for purposes which are outside of the legitimate end of the organization. These are sensible premises, and the position thus assumed cannot be controverted. The feeble threat of the challengers that "regiments avoiding or declining the contest will, under the circumstances, be considered as disavowing the claim to be the best drilled," amounts to nothing. So long as a militia regiment performed its duty faithfully, the public will assign it its proper grade in drill, discipline and general efficiency.

The Church of the Holy Trinity in Brooklyn, whose rector, Rev. Dr. LITTLEJOHN, was recently elected to be Bishop of the new Diocese of Long Island, has done an excellent thing in asking Rev. CHARLES H. HALL, D. D., of Washington, to take his place. The soundness and sense of Dr. HALL'S ministrations in the Epiphany Church, of that city, are well known to thousands who found their way to his church during the crowded war-days of the national capital. Besides being a vigorous manager, an able thinker, an effective preacher and a tender pastor, Dr. HALL is essentially a manly man, one fully alive to the peculiar evils of the day, and by no means timid in setting them forth. He is also a gentleman of fine culture; and if Brooklyn succeeds in gaining him, she will have made a worthy addition to her unusually fine array of clerical talent.

It is certainly unfortunate that we are in a condition where the sword of the army has to be used for cutting the Gordian knots over which civil authorities fash themselves in vain. But the military element seems the surest in dealing with difficult cases, and the shortest as well. We remarked the other day the quick solution of doubts as to the friendship or hostility of Indians since the army has taken hold in earnest on the Plains. The riotous troubles on the Ogeechee River in Georgia, on being taken charge of by the military authorities, instantly quieted down; the negroes announced themselves willing to surrender to the United States authorities, and did so, and the prospect now is for quiet.

The singular bill about to be brought into Congress by Senator POMEROY and Representative CLARKE, for a Central Indian Railroad, to be built by the Indians themselves, is full of suggestion, as indicating the spirit in which the Indian remnant on this continent should be treated. If these Cherokees, Chickasaws, Creeks, Choctaws and Seminoles can be brought in such a way still further within the pale of our civilization, the wilder tribes may in some similar manner be led to identify themselves with the general well-being of the country. Is there any fatal necessity which obliges us to destroy them for having their natural savage feelings on the subject of their own country? Any plan of conciliating, instead of clearing them off, would be worthy of every consideration. If no lobby jobbery is in the way, it would be a happy piece of legislation that would make those Creeks and Choctaws proprietors of a railroad—an American achievement on a level with many that have recently won the praise of foreigners, and one that would lead those unhappy buffalo hunters to think we are friendly to the red race, after all.

Ever since the Big Organ came to Boston, the people have been wild on the subject of "big things" in music. They are now getting up a "big concert"—on "the Common," of course; and all the Eastern papers are agog with it. One of them says "it shall eclipse all the former musical efforts of the world." A second says that "the man who has no music in himself will soon find Boston a poor abiding place." A third declares that there will "be no discordant elements in the programme, but the great seal of harmony will," and so forth, and so forth. An orchestra of a thousand instruments, a chorus of twenty thousand voices, (to say nothing of a battery of artillery let off by electricity,) ought to make a noise, at least. Let us hope that this grandiose attempt will not illustrate the fact that it does not make a man a great painter to use a big brush.

Editing in the "far West" seems to be a process of knifing as well as "scissoring." The editor of the Owykee Avalanche informs his readers that "the other day, while quietly seated in our sanctum, two villians, one armed with a hatchet, and the other with a Bowie knife, made a violent attack upon our person." Nothing appalled, "we seized a knife about two feet long, used for cutting paper, and bled our assailants freely. They sued for mercy." One naturally inquires for the reason of so strange a rencontre; and the editor tells us that it took place merely because "we lately referred directly to a ruffian known as Capt. FRESCOW, and incidentally to a guerrilla named AT. LAGE." It is astonishing to find so courteous a reference met by so discourteous a remonstrance—but we suppose that is local etiquette.

It is an awful fact that in England, since the beginning of the year 1866, more than six hundred men and boys have been killed by explosions in the collieries. And even the smallest catastrophes of that kind number more victims than the most terrible railway accidents. And yet this is in the face of extraordinary care in the constant application of scientific principles for ventilation. Great stress has been laid, of late, upon more accurate readings and registrations of the barometer and thermometer, as it is during their most rapid changes that explosions are likely to happen. The accumulation of fire-damp can be prevented only by the counterbalancing weight of a column of air. When, by a general contraction of the outer atmosphere, this is partially withdrawn, the deadly gas is ever ready to rush out and devour its victims with fiery death. We trust that the managers of our deepening mines are keeping themselves awake to these evils, and the accumulating records of experience which alone can help to prevent them. Careful habits of observation and registration ought to be part of the constant training in our collieries; their growth in depth is growth in danger.

AFFAIRS IN GEORGIA.

Settling with Plantation Hands—Labor Prospects for 1869—Political Meetings—Mr. Alexander H. Stephens and the University—Rauschenfisms: a New Book and a New Discovery.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CRAWFORD, OGLETHORPE COUNTY, Ga., Thursday, Dec. 31, 1868.

Christmas, instead of being a merry season, when every one tries to be happy according to his means and capacity, is now, in all agricultural populations in these parts, the most anxious, troublesome and harassing time of the year. It is the time when the planters settle with their laborers for the past year, and try to engage hats to divide their crops, explain the weights of their cotton bales, the varying price of the cotton, the cost of bagging, rope and freight, and the more mysterious and complex charges of the factors. They have to work various sums in vulgar fractions to show the share of half, three-quarters and two-thirds of hands, and after all the demonstrations, explanations and calculations, they have to convince the negroes that they have rendered unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and that the accounts are correct and just.

This is not by any means as easy as it might appear to those who have never tried it practically. I have witnessed the operation on the farm of a friend who plants in this county, and who has been engaged the whole week in settling the accounts of his laborers. He had about fifteen freedmen to satisfy, and though I never saw clearer or more self-evident accounts, it seemed almost impossible to make the negroes comprehend them or be content with the result. They could not understand that some of the bales weighed more than others, and that some sold at more per pound than others; that the charges on some were more than on others, and that the quality varied. They could only understand that a certain number of bales were sent to market, and that cotton sold this year at twenty-three cents. Most of them had no idea of the amount of goods of various sorts which the employer had bought and advanced to them during the year, and though, as the items were read, they all acknowledged their correctness and their correspondence with the charges made at the time in their several memorandum books, when the total amount was read they could not be made to admit that they owed "that much." From all this I deduced the moral, which is entirely plain to me, that it is clearly better for the planter to give his hands stated monthly wages in money, and give them regular rations, and have nothing whatever to do with any other purchases for them. Wherever the contrary system is practiced I have seen confusion and discontent, and though I am persuaded that the negro makes more on an average of years by a share in the crop, he is never as well satisfied as where he is paid his wages with no drawbacks or advances.

From what I have seen and heard, the negroes in this part of the State have cleared for their year's work from $100 to $150, all of which, in an hour after it was paid, was spent in the nearest store for every imaginable article, from a flute or melodeon to a yard of osnaburgs or a pair of breeches.

There is a greater difficulty this year than there was last to engage hands for the whole twelve months. The negroes have a marked indisposition to contract for so long a time, and desire to engage by the day, or, at the longest, by the month, believing that they can make more by "jobbing about." They hear of a day laborer having earned near a town 75 cents or $1 per day, and, without making any deduction for wet days, failure to get jobs, sickness, or any other cause, imagine that they can make a sum equal to 75 cents per day throughout the year. Then, again, many think that "to go to themselves another year" is the sure way to be healthy, wealthy and wise; and not a few think that when "GRANT comes in" the real day of jubilee will have arrived, and that it is the part of prudence to have no entangling alliances when that day arrives. To-morrow is the day when work should commence, but there are very few who will be able to make the start or have the hands to prepare for a crop. Everyone is on the alert, anxious and perplexed.

POLITICAL MATTERS.

In the political world perfect calm has existed during the holidays. I have not heard of a single Kuklux, and since I left Augusta I have not heard of BLODGETT'S sins or BULLOCK'S enormities. The people seem to have made up their minds to being "reconstructed over again," and believe that EDMUNDS' bill will pass, while they ask who is EDMUNDS and what is his bill?

Mr. NELSON TIFT, member of Congress from the Second Congressional District, (situated in Southwestern Georgia,) has just issued a circular letter from Washington, addressed to the judicial officers of the State, from Judge of the Supreme Court to Intendant of a village, asking them to send him, to be laid before the Reconstruction Committee, answers to the following eight questions:

1. Are the laws faithfully and impartially administered?
2. Is there any organized or unorganized resistance to the law?
3. Are the officers of the law faithful to their duties?
4. What are the disposition, feeling and treatment of the whites toward the blacks?
5. What toward the Republicans?
6. What toward Northern men visiting or desiring to settle in Georgia?
7. Do the people desire peace and a restoration of their proper relation to the States and Government of the Union?
8. Is there in your opinion any necessity or justification for the proposed destruction of the present Government of Georgia and the establishment of a military or provisional Government?

Mr. TIFT avows his purpose to be to defeat BULLOCK'S proposed plans, by making known to the Committee the truth on the above subjects. As most of the Judges owe their appointments to BULLOCK, and as many of them are active Republicans, their testimony will doubtless have much weight with the Committee. Mr. TIFT himself is a native of Connecticut. He settled in Georgia many years ago, made a considerable fortune, represented his county (Dougherty) frequently in the State Legislature, and in a district overwhelmingly black, was elected as a Democrat by a large majority.

The National Republican, of Augusta, which used to be the organ of Mr. BULLOCK and what is known as the "Augusta Ring," has ceased to exist, or rather has relapsed into its primary shape—the Press—in which it appeared soon after the war, as a cheap, enterprising, independent newspaper. It is said that partisan politics did not pay, and that the proprietor, Mr. PUGHE, partly from conviction and partly from interest, resolved to oppose the recent conduct of the Governor. It is a straw, and shows how the wind blows in certain quarters.

MR. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

Mr. ALEX. H. STEPHENS has been in Athens for some days, to see if he can make arrangements to accept the Professorship of History to which he was elected in the beginning of this month by the Trustees of the University of Georgia. He is very anxious to accept and devote the remainder of his life to literature and instruction; but he is not sure that he can do so without interfering too much with his engagements as a practicing lawyer, and in the preparation of the second volume of his book upon the late war. It is universally hoped that he will accept the position. He would be a great acquisition to the University, because, in addition to his scholarship and eminent qualifications for the place, his popularity would do great benefit to the institution.

Departure of Ex-Captain-General Lersundi—The Policy of his Successor—Another Fight Reported.

HAVANA, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

Ex-Captain-General LERSUNDI and Admiral CHACON sailed to-day for Spain. The steamer on which they embarked was accompanied some distance outside the Morro by tugs and small boats containing the friends of the departing Captain-General. His return to Spain is regretted by a large number of our citizens. This morning Gen. LERSUNDI, previous to his embarkation, paid a visit to Admiral HOFF on board his flagship the Contocook. He was received with the usual ceremonies. This is the first instance known here of of a Captain-General going on board of a foreign man-of-war.

The inaugural proclamation of Capt.-Gen. DULCE is awaited with much anxiety by Spaniards and Cubans, both parties being in the dark in regard to his future policy. The Cubans express the opinion that the revolutionists at Bayamo will refuse to listen to any propositions for a compromise; and the Spaniards are convinced that the troops now in the island, reinforced by those on the way hither from Spain, will speedily put an end to the revolution.

A report is in circulation that the revolutionary Generals, SANTISTEBAN and LOPEZ, had a battle on the 22d, ult., with Col. LONGA, on the Salso River, and defeated him, capturing two flags and forty-two prisoners. The insurgents acknowledge a loss of sixteen killed and thirty-six wounded. This news comes solely from rebel sources, and is flatly contradicted by the official dispatches received by the the Government here.

Gen. DULCE to-day gave orders that the most ample latitude be allowed by the Government censorship for the publication and forwarding of telegraphic news. Other important concessions, enlarging the liberty of the Press, are expected to follow.

It is reported that the Liberal journal El Pais, which suspended a short time ago, will resume publication in a few days.

Mysterious Death of Two Colored Men in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

This morning information was received at Police headquarters that two colored men, employed at the residence of the French Minister, had been found dead in their beds, Lieut. NOONAN, of the Sanitary Company, and Officer REED immediately proceeded to investigate the affair. On entering the room in the northeast corner of the basement the bodies of both the men (SANDY DIGGS, who was employed as a messenger or porter, and LEWIS TAYLOR, employed as a waiter about the house, were found in the condition described. The officers made very careful examination of the room and the articles in it to get a clue; and Detectives CLARKER and BIGLEY, deeming the case worth a close investigation, also took the matter in hand. It was at first thought by some that death was caused by suffocation, gas escaping from the pipe of the furnace by which the house is heated, running through the room near the ceiling, and by others that it was caused by this, and the dampness of the room together, but as there was a hole through the partition into an adjoining room in which there is plenty of air, and it appearing the parties had slept in the same room for the past two years without any damage to either of them, there must, of course, be some other cause assigned for these deaths. There was nothing whatever found in the room which would lead to the belief that their decease was the result of their own hands, and, indeed, from the characters given them by the other employees at the house and many of their friends, such a thought would be the last entertained. Both parties appeared to be in their usual good health yesterday. A post-mortem examination was made this afternoon. The result will be communicated to the Coroner's jury to-morrow.

MEXICO.

Col. Espinosa Killed in a Duel—Ratification of Treaties.

HAVANA, Tuesday, Jan. 5.

A steamer has arrived from Vera Cruz, and brings the following news:

Col. ESPINOSA was killed in a duel at San Luis. More troops were to be sent from Puebla against the insurgents in the Sierra. The Mexican Congress, by a large majority, has approved the Convention of the 4th of July, made with the United States for the settlement of the claims of the citizens of both countries. The Congress, in secret session, has also approved a treaty with the United States, recognising the American doctrine of the rights of naturalized citizens.

The Police authorities of the City of Mexico had issued orders restricting the performance of religious ceremonies, which had caused some of the Churches to close their doors. A Police regulation had also been put in force prohibiting the sale of liquors after 6 o'clock in the evening. Several journals object to these new orders on the ground that they attack personal liberty, the free exercise of religion and the rights of commerce.

BOSTON.

The Newest Notion—Proposed Monster Musical Festival to Commemorate the Return of Peace—The Programme—Who have been Invited.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

BOSTON, Tuesday, Jan. 5, 1869.

Public curiosity here, and indeed in distant places, has been greatly excited by the mysterious and vague statements that have been made in the daily and weekly papers of the city, from time to time, during the past fortnight or so, regarding a forthcoming "grand and magnificent affair." From enterprising out-of-the-city papers, whose correspondents, unlike the unfortunate members of the Boston Press, have not been sworn to profound secrecy by the proprietors of the enterprise, the people have learned that the "affair" is to be a monster musical festival, that it is to come off some time in June, that it is to be conducted on a truly gigantic scale, and that it is to far outshine by its brilliancy and grandure any and all like festivals that have ever been held in this or any other country in the world. This, however is all that has been learned, and is considered exceedingly unsatisfactory. For this knowledge has but sharpened the curiosity of the people, and increased their thirst for the particulars. To-morrow morning, if I mistake not, they will have them; for then, according to the agreement between the newspaper men and the projectors, the seal will be removed from the mouths of the former, their tongues will be loosened, their pens will be given full swing, and they will be allowed to write and to print what they please and all they please concerning the "affair."

As I have managed, no matter how, to learn the whole story in advance of the public, and, as I am not in the ring of unfortunate knowing ones sworn to secrecy, I hasten to tell it to the TIMES. In the first place, then, the "affair" is to be called "the Mammoth Musical Jubilee," and is to commemorate the return of peace. It is to be given about the middle of June, and will continue for nearly if not quite a week. For its accommodation a building is to be put up on the sacred (to Bostonians, at least,) Boston common, spacious enough to accommodate fifty thousand auditors, a chorus of ten thousand, and an orchestra of one thousand strong. I am enabled to give an idea of the programme, it having already been partially arranged. The school children of the city—who, it must have long ago been noticed, are never left out in any Boston musical festival—forming a choir of twenty thousand or so, will begin the great concert by singing "Hail Columbia," accompanied by the orchestra of ten thousand, and, moreover, by the ringing of bells, firing of cannon, &c., by electricity, from the conductive desk. This, if successful, cannot fail to be a brilliant opening indeed. One day is to be devoted to oratore choruses, such as "The Heavens are Telling," HAYDN; "See, the Conquering Hero Comes," HANDEL; "Hallelujah," HANDEL; "Thanks be to God," MENDELSSOHN. It is also proposed to produce the ninth symphony, popularly known as the choral symphony of BEETHOVEN. This is considered the greatest undertaking of all. Then another day is to be given up to the production of the works, which it is expected will be contributed by the living musicians of note. There will be much patriotic singing, and a good deal of instrumental music. The entire programme will be given out soon.

I understand that all the great people of the city and the State, unmusical as well as musical, encourage the enterprise. Singers for the chorus and players are to be invited from all parts of the United States, and an agent is to be at once sent to Europe to request the presence of all the great living composers—AUBER, WAGNER, VERDI, &c., and to induce each of them to contribute a piece for the show. Then, in order to add additional brilliancy to the occasion, the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, the Governor of each and every State in the Union, every officer of the army and navy of any sort of note, and distinguished people generally in America and, too, beyond the borders, are to receive personal invitations to be present. Boston people are expected to show off their boasted hospitality, and entertain quite royally the strangers that may come within her gates during the jubilee season.

Now, those charged with perfecting the arrangements in the matter, it seems, have gone to work in the right way. A guarantee fund of $150,000 is to be subscribed, and there is to be plenty of money to carry the work out as it should be carried out. I understand from the very best authority that the principal hotels have already subscribed a $1,000 each, and many of those who have been consulted regarding the enterprise, have subscribed sums ranging from $1,000 to $100 each. The price of season tickets, with reserved seats, and admitting three, has been fixed at $100 each.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

Vital Statistics of New-York and Brooklyn—The Slaughter-Houses to be Removed at Once—Trouble Among Employes of the Board.

The Metropolitan Board of Health met yesterday afternoon, President G. B. LINCOLN in the chair.

Permission was given to the Fish Guano Company, of Astoria, to continue their business at that place until the 1st prox., by which time they must discontinue it.

Complaint was made in a communication from the United States Consul at Malta, that American vessels frequently leave that port without the required health bills from our Consul. The matter was referred to the Health Officer.

It was resolved to notify the occupants of the houses No. 111, 113, 115 and 117 Navy-street, Brooklyn, to vacate the premises by the 1st of February, as the buildings are in a very unhealty condition.

The Registrar of Vital Statistics reported that during the week ending with Saturday last, there were 367 deaths in New-York and 138 in Brooklyn. Thus the year ended as it began, with a favorable state of the public health. There were 24,889 deaths in the year in New-York. The third quarter, or three months ending Oct. 1, witnessed a mortality that will be as memorable as the hot Summer in which it occurred. The 8,658 deaths in New-York and 3,402 in Brooklyn in that period, was almost double the normal rate of mortality that has been experienced in the quarter just ended. The statistics of the registration of births and marriages in the City of New-York, during the same week, were as follows: Total number of births returned by physicians, 333; still-births, 49; persons married, legally certified by clergymen and magistrates, 224.

A large number of butchers were present during the meeting, who endeavored, through their spokesmen, to get the Board to extend the time allowed for the removal outside the prescribed limits, for ninety days more, instead of enforcing the stipulation to leave on the 1st inst. The Board denied the application, and decided that all the ordinances hitherto allowing the driving or slaughter of cattle in the City below Fourtieth-street, should be repealed, and that all slaughter-houses, below that line should at once be removed.

Commissioner STORRS offered a resolution relative to the amount of time devoted by the Sanitary Superintendents, their assistants, and Inspectors, to the interests of the Board, as adopted at a private meeting, held recently, should be referred to a special Committee. No one seconded the motion, and thus the matter dropped.

For several months past rumors have been in circulation that a number of the employes of the Board were giving scarcely any of their time to the important work of their offices. As this state of things was calculated to demoralize the Board, and to impair its efficiency it was resolved to exact eight hours labor for the Board, each day, from all its sanitary inspectors, and further that the Sanitary Superintendents of New-York and Brooklyn be required to devote their entire time to the duties of their positions, and be not allowed to hold any other office or to receive any other emolument.

The adoption of this measure has, it is said, created a general consternation among those whom it affects, and nearly

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Canal Debt Paying Interest 30th September, 1868.

	Principal.	Annual Interest of.
Under Art. 7 Sec. 1, of the Constitution	$2,230,700 00	$111,535 00
Under Art. 7 Sec. 3, of the Constitution	10,324,100 00	619,196 00
Under Art. 7 Sec. 13, of the Constitution	1,686,000 00	101,100 00
Total	$14,239,800 00	$831,831 00

There are also $10,160 of Canal debt, which sum is past due, and does not now bear interest; this is included in my previous statement of Canal Debt.

The aggregate balance of all the Sinking Funds applicable to the Canal Debt in the Treasury, and temporarily invested on the 30th of September, was $4,017,282 43. These Sinking Funds are pledged for the payment of the interest and the redemption of the principal of the several debts and loans incurred under sections one, three and twelve, of article fifteen, of the Constitution, in the construction and enlargement of the canals. The application of the above balance to the several debts for the payment of which these funds have been provided and set apart, would reduce the above outstanding indebtedness to the sum of $10,207,091 34, as will more fully appear from the following statement:

	Debt 30th Sept., 1868.	Balance of Sinking Fund, including investments.	Balances of debt after temporarily applying Sinking Fd.
Under Art. 7, Sec. 1 of the Constitution	$2,240,660 00	$2,136,462 27	.....
Under Art. 7, Sec. 3 of the Constitution	10,324,100 00	1,122,320 12	$201,879 88
Under Art. 7 Sec. 13 of the Constitution	[illegible]	[illegible]	1,183,211 36
Total	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

It will be seen from the last statement, which is made by the Canal Department, that the total amount of canal debt is $76,189 67 in excess of the amount previously stated by me. The first statement is from the Comptroller's books. The explanation of this discrepancy is as follows:

The canal debt, under section 1 of article 7 of the Constitution, is	$2,240,660 00
The Sinking Fund is	2,316,053 67
Excess of Sinking Fund over Debt	75,193 67

—which the Comptroller has included in the Sinking Fund applicable to the payment of the residue of the Canal Debt, and which the Auditor does not include.

The amount invested to the Sinking Fund, under section 1, is fully sufficient to pay the balance due on the debt originally incurred for the construction of the canals, and known as the canal debt of 1846. The extinguishment of this debt makes a further annual appropriation of $4,700,000 no longer necessary, and enables the Legislature to apply the surplus revenues to the immediate payment of the general fund debt and enlargement loans, in accordance with the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of article 7 of the Constitution.

The Auditor of the Canal Department reports that the amount of canal debt on the 30th of September, for the payment of which the canal revenues are chargeable, is $4,554,647 86. The annual appropriation of $1,500,000 hereafter required by said section 2, will be sufficient to pay the principal and accruing interest of this debt in less than four years. The debt constructed by virtue of the provision of said section 3, for the enlargement and completion of the canals, amounting, on the 18th of September last, to $10,324,100 matures on an average in less than six years. To supply the sinking fund with the means to pay the interest and redeem the principal of this debt as it falls due, will require an annual appropriation of $2,340,000. Funds have been provided for the payment of all outstanding claims and liabilities against the State, except such as may have arisen during the last year for awards made by the Canal Appraisers for lands appropriated or occupied for public purposes. The amount of business transacted upon the canals, their general condition, management and supervision, compare favorably with any previous season. Their revenues have been nearly half a million in excess of those of 1867, while their current expenses, for care, superintendence, and ordinary repairs, have been over $300,000 less than the annual average for the four preceding years.

It affords me great pleasure to congratulate the Legislature and the people of the State upon the fact that the surplus revenues of the canals for the past fiscal years have been sufficient to pay the balance of the canal debt of 1846, satisfy the other requirements of the Constitution, and contribute over a $100,000 "to defray the necessary expenses of the Government."

The Erie Canal, by its geographical position and its physical characteristics, has a special and an important relation to the commerce and business not only of our own State, but of the populous and rapidly growing communities of the great Northwest. Connecting the Hudson with the lakes, it is an indispensable link in a chain of water communication, which continues to be of great power and value notwithstanding the improvements in the methods of land transportation which are characteristic of our times. This work is a trust for the people of the State, whose enterprise and capital have created it; but it is to be administered in a spirit of liberality toward those great populations whose growth has been fostered by it, and whose welfare it continues to effect. To maintain it in a condition of efficiency, and to improve it in a practical manner, as the necessities of business may from time to time demand, is our interest as proprietors, and a wise policy with reference to the commerce of the State and country. To protect it from embarrassment, arising out of improvident expenditures, ill-considered changes in its structure, or charges upon its revenues, growing out of other undertakings, is an obligation clearly resting upon us. The general plan of its construction and its adaptation to the traffic which it was intended, provide us a convenient, easy, and an economical means of transportation. The complaints that have arisen, some of which have been made the occasion of demands for fundamental changes in the work, have been provoked mainly by failures in the administration.

The most unnecessary, as well as the most mischievous of these failures has been the allowing of the water-way of the canal to become narrow at the bottom, and shallow, by neglect to remove the gradual accumulations of earth incident to the use of the work and the lapse of time. The consequences have been that the flow of water has been obstructed, its supply lessened, especially on the short levels, the movement of the boats retarded, the time of transits lengthened, and the cost of transportation increased. Frequent complaints of a serious character have also arisen from the failure to make provision for prompt repairs, for keeping locks in efficient working order, and for doubling them when necessary. All persons doing business on the canals will agree that these evils have been much less during the navigation season of 1868 than before. During and for some time prior to the season of 1867, they were so serious as to greatly diminish the efficiency of the canals, and to create very extensive dissatisfaction among all persons engaged in the business of transportation. I do not propose now to speak at length in regard to the specific improvements, to the making or which such surplus revenues as the State may have at its command, should be applied. Upon this subject I respectfully refer you to the able report of the State Engineer, of which I ask your careful consideration. Besides such general improvements as experiences suggest and the demands of commerce require, it is a constant duty, as well as the best economy, to keep the canals in all their length in thorough, and in the best and most efficient working condition. It is especially important that the water-way be restored to its full dimensions, and even be incidentally and progressively enlarged. The considerations which I have submitted are applicable to all the canals in proportion to the extent of their business.

With regard to the present contract system for repairs to the canals, I beg leave to call your attention specially to the following extract from the report of the State Engineer: "The present system of repairs has proved a great disappointment to its early advocates, and as an experiment, has wholly failed in protecting the interests of the State, and in preserving and maintaining our public works. It has proved to be anything but economical to the State, or beneficial to navigation, and its repeal is earnestly desired by all directly interested in the navigations of the canals, and strongly recommended by all the present and retiring canal officials." These views of the State Engineer meet with my full approval, and I unite in his recommendation. In concluding these remarks, I desire to enter my earnest protest against the proposition, which in some quarter has met with favor, that it is the duty of the General Government to interest itself in our canals, and ultimately to acquire possession of them. Our State has a just pride in its public works, and is quite competent to take care of them. To foster and protect them, to adapt them fully to the public necessities and to the growing demands of the internal commerce of the country, should be the duty of the legislative and Executive departments.

SALT SPRINGS.

The Superintendent of the Onondaga Salt Springs reports the quantity inspected during the last fiscal year at 6,793,614 bushels, being an increase of production over that of the previous fiscal year of 2,016,454. The amount of revenue received from all sources was $68,049 47; total expenditures connected with the superintendency of the Springs was $49,239; the amount of net revenue received by the State being $38,811 47.

STATE PRISONS.

The following facts in regard to the receipts and expenditures of the State Prisons are furnished me by the Comptroller:

EARNINGS.

Sing Sing	$138,863 78
Auburn	126,334 89
Clinton	238,426 55
Total	$499,127 22

PAYMENTS.

Sing Sing	$308,364 36
Auburn	206,899 53
Clinton	420,008 31
Total	$935,213 20

For the number of inmates of the several prisons, and other details, I respectfully refer you to the reports of the Inspectors, which will be duly presented.

Our prisons have not been for many years self-supporting institutions. I am satisfied they can be better managed as well in respect to finances as discipline. The prison system of this State abounds in evils such as errors. Many of these are doubtless due to the fact that the persons appointed to discharge the duties of agents, wardens and keepers are too often selected from political considerations only, without reference to their capacity and qualifications. The present contract system for the employment of the labor of the prisoners is an unwise one. It operates very unfavorably the discipline of the prisons, and does not produce satisfactory pecuniary results. The labor of the convicts should be employed entirely by the Prison agents, and the products of such labor sold by them for the benefit of the State. This system would remove many existing objections in regard to convict labor, and would be to advantage to the public.

The law passed some years ago, allowing to convicts, for good behavior, [illegible] deduction from their sentences, a certain number of days' way of commutation [illegible] of sentence, has been beneficial in its operation [illegible] under a system by which the Superintendent [illegible] should directly employ the labor of small portions [illegible] provision should be made that a part of their earnings be laid aside for them, to be paid to them on the expiration of their sentences, the effect upon their present conduct [illegible] would, I think, be useful alike to them and to society. I cannot in this message enter into detailed statements and suggestions of all changes necessary for prison reform. I commend to your consideration the report of the Prison Association, which, under a resolution of the last Legislature, was directed to investigate the financial administration of the State Prisons and the reformatory agencies employed in them.

It is time that the great State of New-York, throughout which extends such a grand and liberal system of common schools, should give to the subject of public management and reform in education which its importance demands, and which, hitherto, it has failed to receive.

I recommend to your favorable consideration the subject of the reformation of juvenile delinquents. It is wise economy to aid them, and to provide for their increase and extension.

I respectfully call your attention to the present practice of detaining witnesses in criminal cases, when unable to give security for their appearance at the trial of the accused. They are generally poor, sometimes strangers, temporarily visiting the State, and made the victims of crime, often have families dependent upon them, and are kept in prison upon the claim that public necessity requires their actual presence at the trial. It frequently happens that, while the unfortunate witness is in prison, the alleged criminal is at large on bail. The unnecessary detention of the innocent to convict the guilty is a cruel wrong. I submit whether it cannot be remedied by proper legislation.

INSURANCE.

Inasmuch as the report of the Insurance Department is not due until after the assembling of the Legislature, I am unable to communicate any information in regard to its workings during the past year. I refer you to the report when presented.

BANKS.

The number of financial institutions having relations, more or less intimate, with the Banking Department, on Sept. 30, 1868, was 488.

Of these 248 were banks that had voluntarily taken the final steps to close their banking business under the laws of this State, by providing for the redemption of their circulation within six years. Three others are insolvent, but their circulating notes are amply secured. Forty-eight banking institutions, not above enumerated, have been converted into National Banks, or are otherwise changing their condition, but have not availed themselves of the provisions of the law for finally closing their circulation account.

One trust company and one savings bank are voluntarily winding up their affairs, and one savings bank—the Niagara County—is closing its business, in consequence of insolvency, with liabilities, however, supposed to be less than $4,000.

Forty-seven incorporated banks, whose charters have expired, still have notes outstanding, for the redemption of which they have not made any final deposit.

One hundred and one savings banks, with an aggregate of deposits exceeding $150,000,000; forty-five banks of discount and deposit, including some of the oldest and most substantial and popular institutions in our State; and four trust companies, with large capital and extensive business, still retain relations with this department, unaffected by the financial changes of the last few years. One of these—the Mechanics' and Farmers' Bank of Albany—evinces its confidence in the free banking system of the State of New-York by returning to it from the national system under the provisions of the enabling act of 1867.

One Banking Association, one Trust Company, and two or more Savings Banks have been organized during the year, and other banking associations have filed certificates, but have not taken the final steps to organization precedent to the transaction of business.

The whole amount of circulating notes of all banks in this State, outstanding and charged to their accounts, on the 1st October last, was $2,954,391; of this $1,655,855 were issues of free banks, $1,288,536 were issues of safety fund and incorporated banks. The amount for which securities were held by the Superintendent of the Banking Department was $3,012,768, leaving unsecured $941,623. But this consists, for the most part, of notes of very old banks, and is represented by their amount of supposed lost circulation, or of banks that through some form of organization still redeem their notes dollar for dollar, and in some instances in gold.

The amount of circulating notes returned to the Bank Department and destroyed during the last fiscal year was $991,373.

MILITIA.

The Adjutant-General reports that the National Guard of the State is, in its organization and discipline, in a sound and prosperous condition; that it numbers between 25,000 and 30,000 men, and consists of fifty regiments of infantry, three battalions of infantry, one regiment of artillery, three battalions of artillery, three batteries of artillery, three regiments of cavalry, two battalions of cavalry, one squadron of cavalry.

The Legislature of 1868 authorized a reduction of the maximum force from 50,000 to 30,000, and during the year forty-nine regiments of infantry and two battalions of artillery have been disbanded.

It will be my aim to reduce, as far as possible, the military expenses of the State, without impairing the efficiency of the State National Guard.

EDUCATION.

The condition of colleges and academies of the State will appear from the annual report of the Board of Regents of the University. The opening of the Cornell University, at Ithaca, in October last, was an event of marked interest. The widely-extended influence of the academies in the State entitle them to liberal consideration. A suggestion has been made that the annuity given, more than thirty years ago, from the United States Deposit Fund, might now, with propriety, be increased. The State Library and the State Cabinet of Natural History, both under the control of the Regents of the University, are in a satisfactory condition. The additions to the Library during the past year have been larger than usual. The collection of the State Cabinet has been greatly increased. I recommend the usual appropriations for both.

I submit the following statement in relation to the Common Schools for the year ending Sept. 30, 1868:

FINANCIAL.

Receipts.

Amount reported on hand, Oct. 1, 1867	$1,197,924 70
Apportioned to districts	2,315,166 80
Proceeds of Gospel and school lands	92,843 46
Raised by local taxation	6,311,186 19
From all other sources	633,346 58	$10,480,467 66

Expenditures.

For teacher' wages	$5,586,546 42
For libraries	26,926 48
For schools	234,382 34
For colored schools	64,765 58
For school-houses, sites, repairs, furniture, &c.	2,166,566 22
For all other incidental expenses	930,640 61
Amount reported on hand, Oct. 1, 1868	1,470,640 01	$10,480,467 66

Statistical.

Number of children of school age	1,464,424
Number of children attending school some portion of the year	971,512
Number of teachers employed in common schools for twenty-eight weeks or more	16,580
Number of male teachers	5,888
Number of female teachers	21,870
Number of school districts	11,731
Number of school-houses	11,673
Number of volumes in district libraries	1,064,299
Amount of public money to be appropriated during current fiscal year	$2,520,000

Since the school tax was increased from ¼ of a mill to 1¼ mills, and the schools opened to all of proper age without charge, the number of children attending has greatly increased. Four Normal Schools for the training of teachers are in full operation. Two others will be opened early in the present year, and two more early in the year 1870.

It is not necessary for me to urge upon you the importance of doing whatever may be necessary to foster the educational interests of the State.

CHARITIES AND ASYLUMS.

In relation to the operation of the several public charities and asylums in the State, I respectfully refer you to the official report, which will be transmitted.

The Commission of Public Charities was organized under an act of the Legislature of 1867. During the past year nearly all the charitable institutions of the State, both public and private, and also the poor-houses, have been visited under the authority of the Board. Until the creation of this Commission, notwithstanding the large annual contributions of the State to charitable institutions, no provision existed for any systematic supervision or examination of them. The report, which will soon be submitted, will, I doubt not, present many interesting facts and valuable suggestions. I commend all the great charities of the State to the favorable consideration of the Legislature, and recommend such additional legislation as may be necessary to increase the efficiency of the commission.

The title to the Insbriate Asylum, at Bingbamton is, under the operation of the law passed in 1867, vested in the State. No provision was made by that law for the government of the institution, and its management is still in the hands of the trustees under the charter. I submit to the Legislature whether any changes should be made in its administration.

THE NEW CAPITOL.

The Commissioners of the New Capitol, in pursuance of an act of the Legislature, have caused the additional land, deemed requisite for the building, to be taken by appraisement. The jury of appraisal, selected under the proceedings in the Supreme Court, was composed of citizens of the highest respectability, and their awards are unquestioned. Plans for the building have been adopted, and contracts for pars of the ministerial for its foundation have been authorized. The site of the building has been fixed upon. I trust there will be no delay in the progress of this work, and I recommend such legislation, with reference to it, as may be necessary.

QUARANTINE AND PUBLIC HEALTH.

The past year has been one of more than ordinary exemption from imported disease. This has arisen [illegible] has long rested upon [illegible] enforcing [illegible] stringent laws for [illegible] her citizens from the introduction [illegible] through her chief commercial [illegible] having provided proper means for [illegible] reception. With a commerce which extends to every clime, and with a tide of immigration which yearly adds hundreds of thousands to our population, we are constantly exposed to the introduction of infectious diseases. The Legislature early appreciated the necessity of guarding against this danger, but the mode by which it could be accomplished was attended with difficulties which checked, and for a while defeated, appropriate legislation. It is believed, however, that when the measures authorized by existing laws shall have been perfected, the State will no longer rest under the reproach of imposing danger upon its officers which it has left them, in a great measure, powerless to execute.

At the session of 1866 an act was passed constituting the Commissioners of Quarantine and the Mayors of the Cities of New-York and Brooklyn, a Board of Commissioners to perform certain duties, among which was the erection of a structure on West Bank, in the lower Bay of New-York, to be used for a quarantine hospital. Pursuant thereto, the Board, in the month of August of that year, awarded the contract for the erection of the structure; but were delayed by an injunction from executing the contract until the 11th of September following. Owing to this delay, it was not until the 14th of January, 1867, that the first crib-work, which was to constitute the foundation of the structure, was sunk in its proper position. The inclemency of the winter soon after compelled the temporary suspension of the work, but it was resumed, and from time to time pressed as the elements permitted, until the foundation was completed. It is now considered to be in proper condition for the erection of the buildings thereon, and it is probable that these will be finished during the present season.

The erection of this structure was regarded by many as a very doubtful experiment, who believed that the first attempt would demonstrate its impracticability at so exposed a point in the waters of the bay. But I am advised by competent judges that its success can no longer be considered problematical.

In performing the duties enjoined upon them, the Board found themselves embarrassed by the restrictions of the act by which they were created. It authorized them to enter into a contract for the erection of the structure, but, in terms, gave them no power to modify or to guard against emergencies or to make alterations which might prove to be necessary in the progress of the work. A recent and severe storm has tested the strength of the structure more thoroughly than it had before been tried. It stood the test; nevertheless I would suggest that an addition to the rip rap should be made for further security.

In view of doubts existing as to the powers of the Board, I recommend such legislation as may be necessary to enable them to accomplish their work.

By an act passed at the session of 1868, the same Board was authorized to erect another structure on West Bank, to be used for a boarding-station for quarantine purposes. Pursuant to that act they have entered into a contract, and I am advised that the work is now in successful progress. Only $50,000 was appropriated by the act, but it was generally supposed that a sum of $50,000 which had been appropriated in the Supply bill of 1867, for the erection of a place for the temporary detention of passengers under quarantine, could be applied to this purpose. A doubt, however, has been suggested whether the act of 1867 is not, in this respect, wholly superseded by a subsequent enactment. I respectfully recommend whatever legislation may be necessary to complete this work, so essential to the due administration of our quarantine system.

The report of the Commissioners, which will be laid before you, will contain the statistics in reference to diseases treated under quarantine during the past year.

CATTLE DISEASE.

During the past Summer a contagious disease, known as the Texas cattle disease, made its appearance in the Western States, and measures were immediately adopted by the Commissioners appointed for the purpose to prevent its introduction into our State. These measures, I am happy to say, proved so successful that but few animals died of the disease, and in every instance it was confined to the farms on which it originally appeared. A full report will be presented to the Legislature at an early day. It is estimated that within this State there are 1,200,000 cattle, the annual value of their products being upward of $24,000,000. The protection of this source of wealth is a matter of so much importance to our agricultural population as to merit the continued attention of the Legislature. I am informed that the act for the prevention of infectious diseases among cattle, passed April 20, 1866, needs amendment in order to enable the Commissioners to act with the efficiency necessary to secure the objects of the law. I recommend the subject to the careful consideration of the Legislature.

IMMIGRATION.

During the past year the number of alien immigrants landed at the Port of New-York was 213,706, showing a decrease from 1867 of 29,023. This decrease may be attributed to the still unsettled condition of political affairs, and the competition of other States, which, in order to attract immigration to themselves, have established direct steam communication with European countries. The Commissioners of Emigration during the past year have improved the lands and buildings and the facilities for the sick and destitute on Ward's Island. They have also established a labor exchange in connection with the landing depots at Castle Garden, by means of which they have been enabled to supply the demand for labor from various parts of the country, and to secure immediate employment for many immigrants. Over thirty thousand orders for male and female immigrant labor have been filled from this bureau of the department. For more detailed accounts of the workings of the Emigrant Commission, you are respectfully referred to their annual report, which will shortly be communicated to you.

For information in regard to the various other Commissions in the Metropolitan District, and other district commissions and Boards in the State, I respectfully refer you to the several reports, which will be duly transmitted.

CIVIL AND CRIMINAL CODES, &c.

The codes prepared by the two Commissions organized under the Constitution have heretofore been presented to the Legislature. The Practice Commission, created pursuant to the twenty-fourth section of the sixth article, has reported codes of civil and criminal procedure; and the Code Commission, under the command in the seventeenth section of the first article, has reported civil, penal and political codes. A book of forms has also been prepared, adapted to the code of civil procedure. These volumes were designed to lay before the people, in a concise and systematic form, the whole body of the common and statutory with formulas for general use. Much labor has been expended by the Commissioners upon their work, which has commanded considerable public attendion. The code of civil procedure has been, to a great extent, adopted by six of the States, that which the law of Legislative procedure by ten of them, and the civil and penal code, the last reported, has been adopted by two of the Territories. In view of the great importance attached to the subjects embraced in these various reports, I commend them to your early consideration. If they do not receive the approval of the Legislature, I respectfully suggest the propriety of prompt action to secure a new revision of the statutes of the State, as well as an immediate reform in our criminal laws.

I particularly recommend that provision be made by statute that in all cases of murder, where the degree of premeditation, or the circumstances attending the homicide, do not, in the opinion of the jury, justify punishment by death, they may render a verdict of murder of less degree, to be punished by imprisonment for a term of years, the maximum of which shall be fixed by law.

METROPOLITAN DISTRICTS AND COMMISSIONS.

The Constitution of the State, in terms, recognises, for the purposes of local government, counties, cities, towns and villages, and no other territorial divisions. It directs that all officers, whose appointment is not provided for by it, shall be elected by the electors or appointed by the authorities of the locality within which their powers are to be exercised, distinctly recognizing the right of electors in local communities to choose their own officers, and, as they bear their own burdens, to administer to their own affairs. The plain spirit of the Constitution has been clearly violated in the creation by the Legislature of other geographical divisions than those fixed and established by the organic law, and in the most flagrant instances in the creation of boards, all departments charged with executive duties, shall be directly and summarily responsible and accountable.

If, with this as the fundamental idea, a plan shall be devised which will give to the political minority within a city a just representation in its councils, we shall doubtless secure better results in municipal government than have ever before been attained.

I respectfully call the attention of the Legislature to another subject in which the people of the City of New-York have and feel a deep interest. The commercial needs of the metropolis demand that there should be some speedy and wise legislatiPn with reference to its wharves and piers. They should be constructed after the best plan for making them convenient, adequate and enduring. The work should be commenced as soon as possible.

The question of probable cost is but of little importance. The city can well afford to pay whatever may be necessary to perfect the work; when completed it would, by the aid of proper legislation in relation to wharfage, yield a revenue sufficient to pay the interest on the expenditure, and to create a sinking fund for the speedy extinguishment of the debt incurred in the construction. It is not necessary that I should commit myself to any particular form of legislation for the accomplishment of this result, but I would respectfully recommend, by way of suggestion, that if it should be deemed impossible to mature a plan during the present session, the Mayor of the City of New-York be authorized to appoint a Board with authority to examine the whole subject, and to report to the next Legislature, for its consideration, a plan of the proposed work, with an estimate of its probable cost, and such suggestions, with reference thereto, as they may deem proper.

THE EXCISE LAW IN THE METROPOLITAN DISTRICT.

The Excise law which is in force throughout the Metropolitan District, excepting only in the County of Westchester (which was, for some reason, exempted from its operation,) violates principles involving the rights of individuals and communities. It confers upon the Excise Board created by the Legislature, and deriving none of its authority from the people in the districts, extraordinary and arbitrary powers, and contains, in my judgment, many harsh and unwise provisions. If the objects of its enactment were to diminish the amount of intemperance, and to lessen the consumption of intoxicating liquors, these objects have not been attained. At the same time, this law has been executed and enforced in an arbitrary, despotic and intemperate manner, and in a spirit which has created great dissatisfaction even among many who were its original supporters; while large numbers of sober, temperate, industrious and law-abiding citizens feel that they are oppressed by its onerous exactions and requirements. No one deplores more than I do the evils of intemperance; but they are not local, are not confined to any section or district, and if they can be checked or modified by legislation, the remedy can only be secured by the operation of general laws. There is no reason, in my judgment, why the whole, or any portion, of the Metropolitan District should be subjected to an Excise law different from that employed to other parts of the State. All such laws should be universal in application, and should have for their object not the enforcement of extreme and arbitrary views, but the encouragement of good habits and the preservation of public order. The present law needlessly violates private rights. It provokes hostility because it is odious to so many, and because it is administered harshly by partisan officers. I therefore recommend its repeal, so that we may have but one law for the whole State, to be administered, whether in counties or in cities, by the legally-constituted authorities thereof, or by officers to be appointed by them. Such a law would command universal respect and general obedience.

PURITY OF ELECTIONS.

Every means should be adopted by which the electors may have secured to them freedom from intimidation or corrupt influences in the exercise of the elective franchise—the highest privilege of a citizen. It cannot be denied that wealth, by its lavish expenditure to control elections, is fast becoming more influential than ability and public service to obtain political power and official station. It is not unusual to hear the claims of public men asserted in proportion to the pecuniary contributions which they make to party funds, in amounts which obviously cannot be required or used for the legitimate purposes of an election. This is one of the startling evils of the times, that nominations to important offices are sought by and given to men of vast wealth, not because of their capacity and qualifications, but in order that their money may be used to accomplish success. The dangers arising and to be apprehended from this condition of things no longer manifold. Officials are taught that money, however acquired, is the passport to office and authority; electors are corrupted, and a power is built up, founded on the possession of riches and their corrupt use, tending to the subversion of the rights and liberties of the people, and the destruction of the principles of our Government. As one result of this growing tendency of moneyed influences to assert an exclusiveness of class and a superior domination, sectional and class legislation has been adopted of late years to control, even in regard to suffrage, large communities by special laws not applicable to other parts of the State. Before the law, all men are equal, and never more so than when in the performance of their right and duty of voting to sustain principles and to elect their representatives. Laws to provide regulations and restrictions in regard to elections should apply to all citizens and to all sections alike. The laws to preserve the purity of the ballot-box and to prevent the corrupt use of money in elections should be general, stringent and rigorously enforced. In my judgment there should be one registry law for the whole State, imposing equal conditions and restrictions everywhere, and it should be the aim thereof to secure to every citizen his right of suffrage, free from intimation, corruption, or onerous exactions; while the corrupt use of money in elections should be severely punished, and every guaranty established by which illegal voting may be prevented.

FEDERAL CENTRALIZATION.

In this connection it may not be improper to allude to the fact that there is a manifest disposition in some quarters to encourage a movement to vest in Congress the control and regulation of suffrage in all the States. This is another step in the direction of centralized power in the General Government—a [illegible] to control elections—which would enable factions and unscrupulous men, for a night [illegible] possession of the national administration, to hold it indefinitely, even against the will of the people. It is very evident that the security of elections in States cannot be secured by transferring the direction or control of them to the authorities at Washington. There can be no purity in the General Government unless it exists first in the States and in the people. The founders of our Government never contemplated the interference of Congress in this matter; they expressly guarded against it.

By the Federal Constitution, "the times, places and manner" of holding elections for Senators and Representatives are required to be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but it is provided that Congress may at any time make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators. This authority to prescribe regulations as to "the time, places and manner" of holding elections, was conceded at the adoption of the Constitution as vesting in Congress no great power, which might be exercised so as to defeat the just rights of the States to representation; but it was argued that it was a power which never was intended to be, and probably never would be, employed, except when the States might attempt to break up the Government by not sending representatives, and then only for national self-preservation. But the question of suffrage was wisely put beyond the control of Congress, and it was provided that "the electors in each State shall have the qualification requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature." This settlement of the right of suffrage was regarded "as a fundamental article of republican government." The question of suffrage is thus withdrawn from the capricious or more dangerous interference of Congress. It is not left to legislative discretion in the States, but is fixed by the State Constitutions; and here, I think, every reflecting mind will conclude that it may be wisely and safely left.

NATURALIZATION AND CITIZENSHIP.

There is also a disposition manifested to place obstacles in the way of the naturalisation of citizens. While, in the Southern States, the right of free and unrestricted suffrage has been suddenly conferred upon large masses of men, who have never before exercised it or discharged any other of the duties of citizens, it is now suggested that new restrictions be imposed upon the enjoyment of this high privilege by immigrants who seek to be clothed with the rights of American citizenship. Movements have been already made for depriving the State Courts of the power of naturalisation, and to confer this power exclusively upon the Courts of the United States, and upon Commissioners to be appointed by Congress. It would be impossible for the Judges of the United States Courts, by reason of the pressure of their judicial duties and the few places in the country at which the sessions of their Courts are held, to extend the necessary facilities to those entitled to become citizens. The whole business would necessarily devolve upon the petitfogging Commissioners created by Congress, holding no responsible official relation to the judiciary of the country or of the States. Thus, naturalization would become more a matter of favor than of right.

The power now is exercised by Judges in the different States representing all shades of political faith, and if there be any abuses in the system, they can be remedied under the existing jurisdiction, and they are far less than those which would result from the transfer of this power to any body of officials not chosen for their judicial qualifications, not exercising judicial functions in other matters, and created by one central authority representing necessarily a political party. These movements indicate a tendency on the part of their supporters to obstruct and hinder naturalization, and thus to discourage the renunciation, by men from other countries, of their allegiance to foreign Governments in order to become faithful citizens of our own. Can this policy be a wise one? All good citizens will certainly favor such legislation as may be necessary to check or punish frauds in naturalization, but the interests of our State and country, peopled from their origin by, and owing so much of their greatness to, men of foreign birth, and to which the tide of immigration so incessantly and rapidly flows, demand that additional rather than diminished facilities should be extended to all those of good moral character and well-defined devotion to our institutions who, having chosen their homes among us, desire to assume the duties and responsibilities of citizens.

We must not forget that during the late war, when our country needed them to fight the battles of the Union, we extended to them the privileges of citizenship after one year's service and an honorable discharge, as one of the rewards for their fidelity to the Government. Now, in the time of peace, their services are quite as valuable in developing the resources of our new Territories and of the Southern States, and in assisting, by their industry and toil, to work out a practical solution of the great problem of reconstruction, and every inducement should be extended to them.

CONCLUSION.

Few questions of principle or policy will be presented for your consideration, toward the decision of which precedent or experience will not furnish you an accurate guide, or at least effective aid. We need only, to the discharge of our trusts in our respective departments, grave, responsible and numerous as they are, an earnest spirit, a constant and vigilant regard for the public interests and an unceasing watchfulness in maintaining the integrity, honor and dignity of the State. With these we cannot fail to meet the just expectations of the people.

But beyond the limits of our jurisdiction, there are questions and principles of far wider significance than those which engage our official consideration; which appeal to us as citizens of a common country; which press upon the people in the form of unequal responsibilities; and in which we all have a deep and abiding interest. I allude to the national issues which await solution. I do not intend to refer to them in any partisan spirit, or to discuss them at length. These issues have presented new and difficult questions of government, of finance and taxation, resulting from the rebellion, and we are without guides in previous history to lead us to their determination. Nearly four years have elapsed since the close of the rebellion, and the Federal authorities have had unquestioned power to reëstablish civil government in the States rescued from sedition, and restore to their people peace and the motives to industry; and yet how little has been done toward these ends!

Had they been attained, the South would now be enabled to bear its share of the taxation entailed by the war, and the North relieved of its unequal responsibility, while the whole country, resuming its former commercial relations, would be so far advanced in prosperity and power that in a few years our financial troubles would cease to be the subject of anxiety. Instead of securing these results, Congress has directed its efforts to the suppression of representation, and the subversion of republican government in the States, prolonging the subserviency of the civil to the military power, and postponing the return of peace. The People, at the polls, have chosen by their suffrage the Chief Magisrate to whose guidance they are willing to commit the destinies of the country, and the settlement of the issues which disturb it. These questions do not belong to party, but to the whole country; and it should be our earnest prayer that he who has been thus chosen shall prove equal to the great trust with which he is charged.

Party organizations must be kept up as the means of preserving great principles and maintaining the integrity of the Government and the liberties of the people. The maiority of the citizens of this State who opposed the policy of the present dominant party in Congress, and the election of its candidate for the Presidency, adhere firmly to their views of public policy, the adoption of which they believe will afford the earliest and best settlement of the great questions which now distract us. They will, however, lay aside all merely partisan considerations, and join in a common spirit of magnanimity and patriotism in sustaining any administration of the Federal Government in every earnest effort which it shall make to restore its credit, to maintain the public faith, to reëstablish the authority of the Constitution, to unite all our people in amity and concord, to give peace and prosperity to all sections of the Union, and to assert, among nations, the honor of our flag, and the rights of those who claim its protection.

There is a spirit of party intolerance growing up which not only arrays men in bitter political hostility, but which creates personal hatred through mere differences of opinion. It follows the elected representatives of the people with detraction and misrepresentation, and impairs their usefulness in the discharge of important trusts involving the public welfare. I consider this a dangerous evil. Public officers, both Federal and State, should be judged by and held responsible for their acts, and not prejudged by clamor and party misconception; nor should they be intimidated by either. My duty is defined by the oath I have taken to execute the laws of this State, and to support its Constitution and the Constitution of the United States. I shall endeavor to do it faithfully; and while I shall uphold and maintain the political doctrines and principles to which I am devoted, and assert and defend the rights of the State and of the people whose representative I am, I will, as the Executive of this State, support the Executive of the United States in every exercise of rightful authority, and in every patriotic effort for the welfare of our common country. The people will approve. War no longer claims offerings of lives and treasure; Peace now demands the sacrifice of prejudices and passion.

The Rogers Murder—Testimony Before Coroner Flynn.

Coroner FLYNN commenced the examination of witnesses in the Rogers murder case yesterday, at his office, No. 4 Centre-street. Medical testimony of considerable length was presented to the Jury.

JAMES TALLAND, who surrendered himself a few days ago in consequence of a rumor that the Police were looking for him, was next called, and his statement, not being taken down, was taken down in writing by Deputy Coroner ARCHER. As the statement is considered an important one by the Coroner, it is withheld from the public eye for the present.

The colored boy, JOHN C. ARMSTRONG, who was in Twelfth-street, and saw the two unknown men just before the assault upon Mr. ROGERS was committed, was next sworn as a witness, and his statement was of important one, also. The statements of the Press were all pledged to secrecy in relation to this evidence; but as the swearing away the law it to publish the important fact that JOHN C. ARMSTRONG was fully identified by the colored boy, we cheerfully repeal the statement.

The inquest was then adjourned until the 16th inst., to allow the Police sufficient time to work up the clue they profess to have obtained. Both TOLLAND and the boy ARMSTRONG are retained by the Fifteenth Ward Police for the present.

Address to the Republicans of Georgia.

REPUBLICAN EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
UNION REPUBLICAN PARTY OF GEORGIA.
ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 28, 1868.

My attention has been called to a card, published by unauthorized parties, calling upon you to hold public meetings and "take such action as will prove to the Governor and to Congress, whether he is sustained in his efforts against rebel usurpation or not." This card has evidently been issued for selfish purposes. An effort is being made to convince you that certain Republicans, whom you have trusted, have "sold themselves to Democratic interests," and are now working against our party. These representations are false. The Republican leaders, whom you have trusted, are true to you. Be not deceived by unprincipled demagogues, who care nothing for your interests, but hope, by appeals to your passions, to deceive you. I advise you to hold no political meetings at present. The public mind is greatly excited, and I believe that no good will be accomplished by holding such meetings at this time. You can rely upon Congress. Congressmen fully understand our condition, and will pass necessary laws. Do not listen to the advice of irresponsible men. When it is necessary for you to

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

REALITIES OF IRISH LIFE. By W. STEWART TRENCH, Land Agent in Ireland to MARQUIS of LANSDOWNE, Marquis of HASTINGS, and Lord DUNSANY. With illustrations by his son, V. TOWNSEND TRENCH. London: LONGMAN, GREEN & Co.

With the blustering of the Fenians during the last few years, and their constant talk about "the wrongs of Ireland," the public in general have become so weary of everything pertaining to the "Green Isle," that it is doubtful whether a work, even of the semi-sensational class, to which Mr. TRENCH's belongs, can attract to itself as many readers as it would pretty surely have at a time when the subject of which it treats had not become so worn and threadbare. Yet the question, to the discussion of which it is in some respects an important contribution, never called for more earnest and careful consideration than it does just at this period from those who have to dispose of it, and since the work must have its influence, a running summary of the contents will doubtless have interest for the American reader.

Mr. TRENCH is a relative, how near or how distant he does not inform us, of the distinguished Archbishop of Dublin. If we accept his own estimate of himself, he must be set down as a man of unflincing nerve, of great physical endurance, unfailing in resource, generous to a fault, prompt in action and always doing just the right thing at the right time. In the preface to the volume, to be sure, the author apologizes for the egotism so apparent in his narrative, but he evidently regards his career as an agent with entire complacency, and as his employers seem to have been satisfied with his course also, in the main, it is perhaps hardly worth while to raise any question as to Mr. TRENCH's possessing all the qualities which he leaves us to infer that he possesses. He first tells us of himself as a pupil at the College of Armagh, where he was at first well "fagged," but afterward took part in a famous but disgraceful "barring out" demonstration, the highly wrought account of which can hardly be classed among those "realities of Irish life" to which the volume is for the most part devoted. After leaving this College, Mr. TRENCH became an undergraduate in Old Trinity College, Dublin. As he was a younger son he felt that he must do something for himself, and early made up his mind to become an agent. The period of Mr. TRENCH's residence at Dublin was during the days of O'CONNELL's supremacy, and we have some graphic sketches of those troublous times. The Ribbon Code was of course then in full force, and was more terrible than it is now. Tipperary County was, he tells us, "the headquarters of the Confederation, and the Kings County and Queens County, Meath and West Meath, Louth and even Monaghan, where, as 'the gap of the North,' it adjoined the midland counties, were from time to time the scene of its unhallowed operations." It is generally supposed that this Code was terrible only to the landlord, but the tenant quite frequently became its victim. Its main object was to prevent any landlord, under any circumstances whatever, from depriving a tenant of his land. "Fixity of tenure" it was determined to carry out to the death. The second object of the Ribbon Society was to deter, on pain of almost certain death, any tenant from taking land from which any other tenant had been evicted. These principles it carried out with relentless severity, and numerous victims in all ranks of life were sacrificed by it. As the Society felt its power, it very naturally carried things to still greater extremes. One instance is cited in which a respectable farmer was threatened with instant death because he dismissed a careless ploughman, and Mr. TRENCH himself once received a letter, illustrated with a coffin in flaring bloody red, and adorned with death's head and crossbones, threatening the most frightful consequences to himself and family, if he did not continue to employ a profligate carpenter whom he had discharged for idleness and vice. As an illustration of what these Ribbonmen did when they carried their threats into execution, Mr. TRENCH narrates with great particularity the circumstances of the assassination of one Mr. HALL, who was shot dead in an open field in the midst of his laborers. Several gentlemen, well armed, were on the spot almost instantly, but no trace could be discovered of the murderer, and in reply to the suggestion that riders should at once be sent out to overtake the assassin, some one well-informed as to the manner in which the Ribbonmen carried out their plans, suggested that he was then doubtless with the laborers in the field, which actually proved to be the fact. Finally, rewards to the amount of fifteen hundred pounds brought out an informer, and the assasin was arrested and put on trial. Mr. TRENCH writes:

"The story told by the informer was a strange one. He said that a farmer on Mr. HALL's estate had hired him (the informer) for £5 to do the deed, and that the young man (the actual assassin) was to have £3 for accompanying him; that the only cause for the murder was that Mr. HALL had prevented the farmer from burning some land for conacre, and that it would be a good thing to rid the country of such a tyrant; that Mr. HALL was expected that day on the estate, and that he (the witness) and his companion agreed to go there also and see how the job could best be done; that he saw Mr. HALL walking in the field with a sword cane in his hand; that he stole up quietly on the grass behind him, with the pistol up his sleeve, and that when he was quite close, Mr. HALL heard him and turned round and asked him what he wanted; he feigned some excuse, saying he came to ask his honor's leave to sow conacre, which Mr. HALL refusing, he passed on. Again he stole up behind his victim near a bridge, and again Mr. HALL turned round, still unsuspicious of his design, but surprised at the occurrence. The intending murderer, thus twice baffled in his design, went aside to his companion, and dashing down the pistol on the ground beside him, said with an oath: 'I see it is unlucky; I will have nothing to do with it.' The young man coolly took up the pistol. 'You are an infernal coward,' said he; 'watch me if I don't do it.'

Mr. HALL was still walking in the fields, enjoying the freshness of this sunny day in May. The young man came up unperceived within twenty yards of him. Mr. HALL heard him and turned round and faced him. The murderer walked on still, without speaking or showing his pistol, straight up to Mr. HALL. Mr. HALL was amazed; but seeing him come steadily and silently on, he half drew his sword-cane, at last suspecting that mischief must be intended. The man still continuing to approach, Mr. HALL sprang back a step or two in order to get his sword-cane free, and in doing so stumbled over a trescock and fell. The young man then went steadily up to him, and before Mr. HALL could get up or recover himself, he put the pistol down close to his head and shot him dead upon the spot. The moment he had done so he threw the pistol into the adjoining hedge, walked quietly to meet his companion, put his hands into his pockets, never left the ground, and was one of those whom we afterward saw standing near the body."

Notwithstanding this very clear story, which was given in evidence, the prisoner escaped a conviction on the first trial, the jury standing eleven for acquittal one for conviction. On the second trial the following scene took place:

"After the witness had detailed how he had himself undertaken to be the murderer, and had twice stolen behind Mr. HALL for the purpose of shooting him in the back, and how he had given up his design because he fancied it was 'unlucky,' the prisoner's counsel said: 'Then it was not your conscience which smote you?' 'Not a bit,' replied the man. 'And you stole up behind the poor old gentleman to shoot him for money?' said the lawyer. 'I did.' 'I suppose you would do anything for money?' 'I would,' replied the man, quite unmalled by the growing desperate. The lawyer still continued to excite him: 'You would shoot your father for money, I suppose?' 'I would,' exclaimed the man, thirsting for your sister?' 'I would.' 'Or your brother?' continued the counsel. 'Ay, or yourself either!' cried the infuriated ruffian, almost leaping from his chair, and turning round so suddenly within a few feet of his cross-examiner's head that his usually undaunted nerve seemed almost expelled by the ferocity of the savage. A thrill of horror ran through the Court, while some, however, could not help smiling, and some laughing outright at the unexpected start given to the able cross-examiner. The effect upon the jury, however, seemed to me to be the reverse of what the counsel had intended. His object had been to impeach the witness' veracity by making him admit his own depravity, parse for one moment believing that he would have acknowledged to such recklessness in crime; but the admissions he made or his willingness to commit any barbarity, and the ferocity with which he turned upon his cross-examiner, left not a doubt upon the mind of any one who had witnessed the scene of the truthfulness of his testimony."

The murderer was this time convicted, and in a fortnight after was executed. Tipperary for a long time after was quiet.

Mr. TRENCH's first experience as an agent was not at all encouraging. Mr. SHIRLEY engaged him to look after his property in the barony of Farney, and going down there with his employer he found the tenants in a great state of jubilation over the death of the former agent, chiefly because he had not responded to their demand to reduce their rents. After some ineffectual manœuvring to secure from the proprietor himself concessions which they had failed to get from his former agent, the tenantry turned out en masse one morning, and gathered around the agent's rent office, near Carrickmacross, where they knew Mr. SHIRLEY was. The crowd gradually increased until it numbered at least 10,000, nearly all of them of that ignorant, unreasoning class of which, as a rule, the tenantry in Ireland is made up, and as they were becoming more and more clamorous with their increasing numbers, it at last became evident that some one must address them, and Mr. TRENCH finally went out of his office to do so. The crowd insisted on his getting upon a chair, so that they might see him and hear better what he had to say, and having done so, he told them that Mr. SHIRLEY had concluded that no reduction of rent was necessary, but that he should himself try to visit as many of the tenants as he possibly could, and wherever he found grievances which it was possible to remove, he should remove them. The rest of the story he shall tell in his own words:

"There was a dead silence when I stopped speaking. It was broken by a stentorian voice.

'Then you won't reduce our rents?'

'I have already given you Mr. SHIRLEY's answer upon that point,' said I. 'Stranger as I am, it is impossible for me to form any opinion as to whether they are too high or not.'

'Down on your knees, boys,' shouted the same voice; 'we will ask him once more upon our knees!' and, to my horror and amazement, the vast crowd, almost all of those who were in my immediate vicinity, dropped suddenly on their knees, and another dead silence ensued. It was a dreadful spectacle. Their hats were on their heads, and their sticks in their hands, some leaning upon them as they knelt, others balancing and grasping them. It was fearful to see the attitude of supplication, due only to a higher power, thus mingled with a wild defiance.

'We ask you, upon our knees, for God's sake to get us a reduction of our rents!' again the same voice cried aloud.

I was greatly shocked. I instantly got down off the chair. I entreated them to rise. I told them that I was distressed beyond measure, but that I had given them the only message I was authorized to give; and quite overcome by such a scene, I endeavored to escape across the crowded space to the office, in order to report proceedings to Mr. SHIRLEY, intending to request that he would himself appear and address his excited tenantry. The moment I moved toward the door the vast crowd leaped again to their feet; I was instantly surrounded, hustled and prevented getting near it. I bore it with good-humoredly, and the door being quite close to me, I had no doubt they would ultimately let me in. But while this scene was going on a shout was raised by those who were at a distance up the road leading to the town, and who had not heard what had been said, 'Boys, we will bring him up and let us see him!' In a moment I was seized, and though I resisted to the utmost, I was dragged up the narrow road which led from the house to the town; I was kicked, and beaten, and pushed, and bruised, my hat knocked off and my clothes torn, and in this state I was dragged into the main street of Carrickmacross.

* * * * *

At length, after walking some distance, I was so beaten and ill-treated that I felt myself becoming faint, and well knowing that if once I fell I should be trodden down without a chance of my life, I asked to stop for a few moments to breathe. I shall never forget that moment. I was then about a mile from the town, on the broad and open road leading to Loughfea Castle. I turned and looked around me, thinking my last hour was come, and anxious to see if there was one kind face, one countenance I had ever before seen, who at least could tell my friends how I had died. But I looked in vain. The hills were crowded with people. The long line of road was one mass of human beings, while those immediately around me, mad with excitement, seemed only to thirst for my blood. Having got a few moments' breathing time, and seeing all appeal to be vain, I turned again on my way, determined, however, to hold out to the last, as I felt that to fall or faint must be certain death. Just then I became conscious of an able hand and a stout heart beside me, and I heard a whisper in my ear, 'They are determined to have your blood; but hold up, they shall have mine first.' The speaker grasped my arm firmly under his own, and walked steadily by my side. By this time I was completely naked with the exception of my trousers. My coat, even my shirt, had been torn off, and I walked on, still beaten and ill-treated, like a man to execution; my head bare, and without any clothes from my waist upward. To increase the misery of my situation, I found that my friend had been beaten and dragged away in spite of himself, and again I was left alone in the hands of these merciless men. I felt, also, that I could now go no further, and that a last effort must be made before my senses left me from exhaustion. Stopping, therefore, once more, I asked to be led toward a high bank near the roadside, and leaning against this I turned and faced those whom I now believed would soon become my murderers. 'I can go no further,' said I; 'what have you brought me here for? What do you want me to do?' Again the same voice which I had heard first at the office, though I could not identify the person from the shouting and confusion around me, cried aloud, 'We want a reduction of our rents; will you promise to get us that?' * * I said very faintly, as a last effort to save my life, and hoping they would name something I could promise to ask for, 'And what reduction will you be content with?' Again the same voice replied, 'We will never pay more than one-half our present rents.' 'Then,' said I, 'there ends the matter. I never will Promise that.' There was a pause and a dead silence. I stood naked and bare-headed before them. They stood opposite to me, with their sticks clenched in their hands, ready to strike. I looked at them, and they at me. They hesitated. No one would strike me first. I saw that they wavered, and instinctively, in a moment, I felt that I had won. The strange pause continued, when at length a shout was raised from the old stentorian voice again, 'Stand off boys—for your lives. No one shall harm him—he is a good man after all!' and in a moment I was surrounded by a new set of faces who dashed furiously toward me. They raised me on their shoulders, swept my old enemies away from me, procured me some water to drink and carried me, now completely overcome, exhausted and almost fainting, into the demesne of Loughfea. * * In the evening I was conveyed in a covered carriage to Carrickmacross, blackened with the beatings, stiff and sore, and scarcely able to stand—musing over the strange transactions which happened that day—and wrapped in a countryman's frieze coat, which had been borrowed to cover my nakedness."

The most notable of the adventures or encounters Mr. TRENCH had with individuals was that with one JOE MCKEE, a tenant calling himself a Presbyterian, who had for five years paid no rent, but whom no one dared arrest, on account of his reputation for desperate courage and daring. This man was the acknowledged leader of all the recusants over a large district of the estate, and it was generally said that "unless JOE MCKEE were put down or overcome, the district in which he lived would hold out in defiance of both law and order." Mr. TRENCH determined to bring matters to an issue with this man, and accordingly, as a first step, issued a warrant against him for debt, and offered £50 to any one who would arrest him. To his surprise no one came forward to earn the reward, and Mr. TRENCH finally determined to take the case in hand personally. Loading carefully a brace of double-barreled pistols, on which he could thoroughly depend, Mr. TRENCH one day, without giving any person a hint of his intention, rode over to MCKEE's cottage. He found the desperado at home, and, of course, took him entirely by surprise. A parley took place before MCKEE would admit Mr. TRENCH to his cottage, which he finally did, but only when that gentleman taxed him directly with his cowardice in refusing entrance to a man who had come alone, and simply to have a talk with him. Once inside Mr. TRENCH found that MCKEE, with his companions—a woman and two men, each between thirty and forty—were engaged in distilling "poteen." MCKEE was a finely formed and very muscular man, about six feet in height, and with not a superfluous ounce of flesh on him—just such a man, in short, as the best would hesitate to encounter in a personal struggle, and one whom Mr. TRENCH felt conscious that he would be altogether unable to cope with individually. After some preliminary skirmishing, Mr. TRENCH came directly to the point and asked MCKEE how he expected to settle the arrearages of his rent. In reply, MCKEE invited him to go into another room where they could talk the matter over by themselves. In this apartment there were only two chairs, a small table, a bed, and beside the bed a bill-hook—a most formidable looking weapon—leaning against the wall. Taking care to place himself between MCKEE and this bill-hook, Mr. TRENCH again returned to the charge:

"I have come to ask you seriously what you are going to do, for you must know that things cannot go on with us as they did before. He rose up hastily, and stood opposite to me at the table: 'I never saw you before, sir, and I don't know what brings you, of all men, here now, but I tell you plainly I never will surrender; I never will give up my little place. I have planted every stick—I have raised every stone,' he continued again, 'and I never will be taken, or give up my place but with my life.' He became so excited and glanced so often at the window and so often at the bill-hook, that I rose quickly too. His nerves seemed wrought into a most extraordinary state of tension, and he seemed gathering himself as if to spring at the bill-hook. I drew my pistols from my pocket, cocked them, and held one in either hand, my eye still fixed upon his. We stood opposite to each other, the small table only between us. I knew that if once a personal struggle should commence with such a frame as that, I had not a chance of my life, and feeling now convinced that he had got me into that room to kill me, I was determined if he stirred to shoot him. But a far different suspicion was in his mind, yet urging him on equally to violence. He thought that I had collected the ballifs or police outside—that I had deceived him—that I had got out his house to arrest him myself; and he was determined either to take my life or to loose his own first, and there we stood like two tigers, watching who would spring first. His eye met mine, but it did not quail in the least; and after watching one another for nearly half a minute—during which time almost a quiver of his eye would have made me shoot him, so great was the tension of my own nerves. I slowly and gradually raised the pistol—without for a moment losing the hold of my eye upon his—till it fairly covered his head. He watched me till he must have seen straight into the barrels of my pistol, when quietly drawing himself up and folding his arms very slowly, as if to show that no sudden movement was intended, he seemed to defy me to fire. A feeling came over me as quick as lightning, with a conviction and suddenness which only moments such as these can bring—that I had mistaken him, that he was acting on the defensive rather than the offensive, and with an impulse which to this hour I am wholly unable to account for, I flung the pistol on the table within his reach, and said, in relief of my own excited feeling, 'You scoundrel, you know you dare not hurt me!'

He looked at me steadily, and then, sitting down gradually and quietly on the chair, without trusting himself to look at the pistols, which lay loaded and cocked on the table before him, he put his hands to his head, leaned his arms on the table, and said, in a low voice:

'What do you want me to do, Sir?'

'To give me possession of your house and place at once,' said I, 'and to come with me now to Carrickmacross.'

'I will, Sir,' he replied.

He rose, put his iron finger into the place where the handle of the door should have been, and turned the bolt; and, walking up to the other men in the kitchen, he said, 'Begone out of that till I give up the place.' They stared at him and were perfectly astounded. 'Begone, I say,' he repeated, and he pushed them out of the room. The young woman then came up to him. 'What is this Joe?' she asked. 'You must go,' said he, kindly. 'Don't talk—leave the house!' She went at once. He put out the fire by kicking the turf on the floor, took sod and twig from the garden, and handed me peaceful possession of the house and grounds! 'And now,' I continued, 'come with me into Carrickmacross.' He hesitated: 'Sir, I will follow you in, but don't ask me to go with you.' 'Why not?' I asked. 'Because I swore no man should ever take me alive, and if I was seen to go in with you the people would say you had taken me prisoner.' 'I understand you,' said I: 'Can I trust you, then? Follow me.' He seemed almost hurt at the question: 'I would not fail in my word for a thousand pounds!' 'I have no doubt of it,' I replied, and I mounted my horse and galloped into Carrickmacross."

MCKEE was as good as his word. He went to Carrickmacross and made a formal submission, but the sequel of the story is sad enough. Although he intended to come to this country, he did not live to leave Ireland, for he actually died of mortification and broken-heartedness at the taunts of his old neighbors and companions, who insisted on it that Mr. TRENCH took him prisoner.

But finally Mr. TRENCH himself fell under the ban of the Ribbonmen, who offered a reward of £50 to any one who would "put him off the walk." He received prompt information of the fact, and, after due consideration, determined to face his enemies and see the quarrel to the end. This certainly required an extraordinary degree of courage, for there were no devices of cowardice to which these villains were not ready to resort to secure their object. He never dared pass from his office to his lodging, a distance of a few hundred yards and in the town itself, without being heavily armed, and at night he was compelled, in order to protect himself, to bring his pistol to bear upon every individual who attempted to approach him while he was in the street. Whenever he was called out into the country on business he was invariably accompanied by his son and another young man, both heavily armed and under positive instructions, if he should at any time be fired upon, not to pay any attention to him until they had secured those who might have attempted the assassination. This precaution was an important one, because in nearly every instance in which the Ribbonmen had committed a murder, the assassins had escaped in the first confusion and while the friends of the victim were looking after and caring for him. For a whole year Mr. TRENCH did not omit a single one of these precautions, for whenever his vigilance was about relaxing, the assassination of some other agent or proprietor acted as a renewed warning. With their usual superstition, the ignorant men who had pledged themselves to commit the murder began to conclude that the task they had taken upon themselves was unlucky, and, giving Mr. TRENCH the go by for the time, they determined first to get one of his assistants, a bailiff, out of the way. By a fortunate conjunction of circumstances, the would-be assassins were caught by the Police as they were in the very act of carrying out their murderous design against this man, PADDY MCARDLE; and one of them, THORNTON, to save his own life, promptly turned informer. The statements which he made to Mr. TRENCH personally shed a great deal of light upon the conspiracy against him, and the conversation which he had with THORNTON are detailed at great length. Here is a single passage from THORNTON's narrative:

"'Do you remember, Sir, the night you were returning, you and MORANT and another chap, (my son,) 'the day after they killed old BATESON.' Well, Sir, there we were, lying behind a wall determined to have you down, when those bloody 'polis' came up and saved you. We were angered that you should still 'be on the walk,' and the boys in Castle Blayney get down a man that was not wanted nigh as much as you. And do you remember, Sir, the evening you were returning home from Culloville, and the two chaps riding, one on each side of you, and you with the big pistols in the holsters? and we let you pass that night too. 'And why did you not not fire,' I asked.

'Bedad we were afeard, Sir, he replied: 'We heard you could shoot a crow on a bush with a pistol, and that the other chaps were darlint shots to and bedad we were afeared to fire lest may be we'd miss you, and then we were sure to be dead men.'

'Then my always riding with armed men along side of me was not a bad plan?' said I.

'Bedad, if it hadn't been for that, you were a ghost long since, as sure as you're now flesh and blood! Shure, weren't we watching day and night to catch you without them, and didn't we try to get at you in the street when going home at night from the office; and fair I suspect somebody must have told you about it, as I was just going up to you myself—as innocent as a lamb—one night wid a letter, and Hodgens was to have put a pistol to your side as you took the letter, and just pulled the trigger, and sorra more any one would know about it!'

'Now, did any one tell you?' he inquired, after a pause, and with an inquisitive smile, as if it was a little mystery he would like to see cleared up before he left the country. 'Well, indeed, I was told of your kind intentions.' 'Bedads, I always said so!' he exclaimed, slapping his thigh with satisfaction at having his previous suspicions confirmed on the best authority. Thus this strange man went on, now delighted to tell me of how nearly he succeeded on sundry occasions in killing me, and now lamenting Hodgen's fate in an easy, sentimental way; talking of him some times as 'him that was no more,' and some times as 'the deceased,' as if he had nothing whatever to do in bringing about his death."

Before Mr. TRENCH got through with this man, he procured from him numerous other important facts bearing upon this conspiracy, as well as the names of fifteen or twenty Ribbonmen who were abettors. HODGENS, his immediate accomplice, THORNTON alleged, knew very much more about the organization than he did himself, and Mr. TRENCH went so far as to secure the promise of a reprieve for him if he would also turn informer. He was upon the point of yielding to the offer, but finally nerved himself to meet his fate, and carried his secret with him to the gallows.

It is difficult to believe that such events as those narrated in the Realities of Irish Life have occurred so recently as since 1850, yet the very recent announcement of the assassination of a local Magistrate in Ireland is convincing proof that the murderous rule of the Ribbon Society has not yet passed away, and that Mr. TRENCH's narrative is quite as much a story of what is now as of what has been. In giving a sketch of the contents of the volume we have inadvertently selected incidents in which the tragic element preponderates, but the narrative is relieved by many romantic, and now and then by episodes which might almost be classed as comic, making it readable throughout and indeed absorbingly interesting.

The events which Mr. TRENCH narrates do not, it must be confessed, shed much light upon the proper solution of the great problem which English statesmen now have to face as regards Ireland. They bring out into a clearer light the difficulties which must be met, and the judgment of every American reader will of course be that the only cure which can be effectual must be a radical one,—one which shall give to the men who live upon the estates some chance to become small owners. But such a revolution as this is of course not at present anticipated, and Ireland must get in some other way that "justice" which Mr. TRENCH himself acknowledges is the cry that invariably comes up from that unhappy country.

ENGLISH, PAST AND PRESENT. Eight Lectures by RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, D. D., Archbishop of Dublin. New-York: CHAS. SCRIBNER & Co.

It is rare that the sixth edition of any book calls for special comment, beyond the criticism which its first and second have received; and certainly no exception to the general rule exists in the case of the admirable lectures of Archbishop TRENCH. That they have arrived at the sixth edition is a very practical token of their wide circulation; and they no longer, therefore, need introduction or eulogy. What we may specially point out, however, at this moment, is the considerable addition of notes made since the first edition, which, of course, enhances the value of what was already a rich contribution to English philology. And, by the way, it is in a note that Archbishop TRENCH, claiming that English is a "world-language," cites this felicitous passage from DANIEL—a poet living and writing two centuries ago, and with prophecy enough in him in this matter, to justify his name:

"And who, in time, knows whither we may vent
The treasure of our tongue, to what strange shores
This gain of our best glory shall be sent,
To enrich unknowing nations with our stores?
What worlds in the yet unformed Occident
May come refined with the accents that are ours?"

The discovery of that happy and enviable quotation would have been a fortune to Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON, or to anybody else who has had occasion of late, to discourse on the "bonds of the common language" of England and America.

Archbishop TRENCH, in speaking of "American English," declares truthfully that it is "often old English rather than bad English;" and this opinion, under various forms of expression, he several times repeats. He even takes care to thank his American cousins for preserving freshet, snag, bluff, hedge, slick, to whittle, to cave in, to rile, to snarl—all of which he finds in old English literature. Most people have taken slick as a pure Yankee invention; but TRENCH quotes FULLER, who describes the New Jerusalem as "fairer, finer, slicker, smoother, more exact, than any fabric the earth afforded." LOWELL cites CHAPMAN and JONSON for the same word. But, if the reader wishes to get fuller and more special information upon this point, let him consult BARTLETT's Dictionary of Americanisms, or, still better, LOWELL's "Introduction" to the Second Series of his Bigelow Papers. In this last work, not only our whole Yankee vocabulary is championed, and the title and pedigree of each downeast word vindicated, but even Yankee pronunciation is shown to be mainly that of English, some centuries ago! The Yankee preterites "riz" for rose, "give" for gave, "shet" for shut, and "thriv," "quit," "het," and "pled," are proved to be very good archaic English.

In his discussion of "English a Composite Language," TRENCH displays so much sound sense and such commendable good judgment and moderation, where philologists are so apt to run to extremes, that one can hardly read it too often. Our natural fondness for Saxon, which holds so much strength and beauty in its forms, and so much tenderness and pathos in its meanings, often leads us to underrate the store of fine shades of expression which the Latin and its derivatives have given us. "We could almost," says TRENCH, "as ill spare this portion of the language as the other." And, indeed, the works of the best writers of English very well show how admirably these two elements may be mingled to produce a composite language, stronger, richer and finer than either of its parts. The sturdy Saxon is set off by the more elaborate Latin—the Latin woof running across the Saxon warp, gives firmness and value to the whole fabric. The Lord's Prayer contains six Latin words—six out of seventy; and, though their proportion is small, yet there is nothing offensive in any one of them, nor should we desire one of them to be changed for its Saxon equivalent. SHAKESPEARE pours the two streams of Latin and English words together, in their just proportions, to make up his mighty current. Yet, on the other hand, one of the favorite English authors, the delight of all subsequent lovers of good English, Sir THOMAS BROWNE, immoderately crowded his pages with Latin words. Many of these have since dropped from the language. What should we think of a writer of our day expressing himself in this way? "Assuefaction unto anything minorates the passion from it." Saxon monosyllables would have set forth the same idea. Yet the Religio Medici and the Urn-Burial are the delight of our age, as of others preceding, showing that even too much Latin will not of itself ruin a writer's style. And that this was a voluntary choice on Sir THOMAS BROWNE's part, is seen from his many sentences of which Latin forms a very small part, and from those few which (for the mere sake of the experiment) he laboriously constructed with every word in them Saxon.

But we break off here, lest what we meant to be a slight paragraph shall grow to a long article. Whoever wishes to study the "gains and losses" of our language, and its changes in meaning and spelling with the lapse of time, will find no better hand-book for his purpose than this of Archbishop TRENCH. It is terse and crowded with material, without being in the least dry. The author's style is at once easy and correct—so different from the equally correct but stiff and prim style of Mr. MOON, for example, who writes as though he "parsed" all his sentences before leaving them, and who gives the impression of an author forever whipping up his verbs to his nominatives, and pulling in his nominatives to his verbs, and drawing in his adverbs on this flank, and his adjectives on the other, lest some hostile philologist shall suddenly make a dash upon his columns, and capture some errant part of speech, or otherwise throw him into confusion. The English churchmen of our day are keeping up their traditional reputation by contributions to philology. Archbishop TRENCH stands at their head, and may rank nearer to the Grimms and Müllers than to the Alvords and Moons of philology.

—The Flower of Liberty. Edited and illustrated by JULIA A. M. FURNESS. (Boston: BENJAMIN B. RUSSELL.) This volume grew out of a patriot design. During the first year of the war the editress began painting for herself, in water-colors, a book of national emblems—principally representations of the Stars and Stripes, the American eagle, &c., &c., in various positions, interspersing these illustrations with pictures of camps, ships, cannon, &c. These illustrations are now published, in tinted lithography, in a volume containing a large number of patriotic poems, selected from the writings of WHITTIER, HOLMES, LONGFELLOW, JULIA WARD HOWE, and others. Some of the designs are rather fantastic; but the volume presents an attractive appearance, and will no doubt please a great many readers.

—Watchwords for the Warfare of Life. From Dr. MARTIN LUTHER. Translated by the author of the Schönberg-Cotta Family. (New-York: M. W. DODD.) "Man is a soldier and life is a fight," says ROBERT BURNS in one of his lyrics; and so said, or might have said, the great German reformer, one of the most robust and exasperated spirits of the sixteenth century, who sincerely believed the Deity to be a Being angrily fastidious respecting the homage due to him from the various tribes and races of mankind, and who nourished, in all fortunes, the idea that the truest divine service was the service of an austere and militant spirit, a song of defiance against the devil and his angels, and a long agony of human championship and endurance to the close—a theology of contest and controversy, derived evidently from the ancient Hebrews of Asia Minor—and, indeed, from all other historic nations of the old Eastern World as well. He was a strange compound—a representative man of his own age of transition—a man of simple conscience and a narrow philosophy, but all the more intense and decided in feeling and action for that reason. He had many of the beliefs and hallucinations of his time. He firmly believed in the existence and power of God's adversary, the Devil, and in a variety of demons going to and fro in the earth and doing his work. It is on record that, being once called in to see a little weasened child with an enormous appetite that was never the fatter for all its food, he declared it had a devil—was, in fact, that sort of thing called, in Germany, a Kill-crop; and he informed the Prince of Anhalt-Dessau, his life-long friend, that, cruel as it may seem, it would be better to throw the creature into the Moldau—a piece of advice which that chieftain disregarded—being rather easy and indifferent in the matter of religious conviction. This only shows that LUTHER was not in advance of his age any more than the good Sir MATTHEW HALE and COTTON MATHER, who dealt so severely and conscientiously with some incomprehensible old women of their day and generation. MARTIN was of an impulsive, honest nature, and, in spite of his order and general profession, a lover of human comforts in a temperate and a cheerful way, with his family. He was said to be fond of quoting—probably in his earlier days—the genial old proverb of the Middle Ages:

"He is a fool, his whole life long,
Who loves not women, wine and song."

He had always a loving and tender heart for his wife and children; and his sayings by the deathbeds of some of these are very touching in their mixture of elevated belief, and the sorrow that would have way in spite of it. The work before us does the English reader good service in gathering from tones of theology a choice collection of LUTHER's sayings, most of which have that meaning of Christian militancy which he considered a vital necessity of the Christian profession. They are all in the evangelical spirit of the doctrine which goes by his name, and such as the devout can best appreciate, while certain peculiarities of his genius and of the age he lived in, are calculated to arrest the attention of the general reader. Some of his ideas, especially those concerning the Evil Spirit, are peculiar and very personal; others are full of a simple and household morality, while in several may be found some of that fanciful grace which came naturally to him as a German—his idea of guardian angels of children, for instance. "From early childhood," he says, "I would accustom a child to be told: 'Dear child, thou hast an angel of thine own. When thou prayest, morning and evening, the same angel will be with thee, and sit beside thy little bed clothed in a white robe; will take care of thee, lull thee to sleep and guard over thee, that the evil one, the devil, may not come near thee. So also, when thou gladly sayest the Benedicite and the Gratias, at thy meals, thy angel will be with thee at table; will serve thee and guard thee.' If we pictured this to children from their earliest years, that angels are with them, this would not only make the dear children trust to the guardianship of the angels, but it would make them gentle and good, for they would think—If our parents are not here, the angels are here, and the evil one must not tempt us to do wrong."

LUTHER believed in angels, investing them with a human sympathy. He also invested them with his favorite attribute of championship—he called them the armies of heaven, who would wield the sword of war on occasion—a Miltonic idea. He kept his ideas of the military and the terrible to the last. His friend STIEFEL said, one day, "As I was on my way here, I saw a glorious rainbow, and I thought of the last day." Like Dr. JOHNSON, with his formidable No, Sir! the theological veteran retorted: "No, it will not come ushered by rainbows. It will come with a crash; with fire and thunder and lightning the whole creation shall pass away. A mighty trumpet-peal will awaken and renew us all! The heavens will become troubled, and there will be earthquakes and thunders perhaps for an hour or longer. Then the people who see it will say—See, see, you foolish creature! Did you ever hear thunder before? And suddenly the whole world will fall together, and many a debt will remain unpaid." MARTIN LUTHER would not accept the beatitude of heaven itself without some preliminary uproar of things in general, and a clash of terror and discomfiture for the unlucky survivors of the human race.

This curious as well as edifying work is got up in excellent style on toned paper.

—English Christmas Annuals. BRENTANO sends us a number of the beautiful Annuals which our English cousins always get out as a greeting to the jolly Christmas holidays. Why don't our publishers attempt something of this sort? There are half a dozen or more of these entertaining annuals, each about the size of a monthly magazine, illustrated in the handsomest manner, and containing short stories by the best writers of magazine literature in England. The most interesting of the set is the Belgravia Annual, edited by Miss BRADDON. Tom. HOOD's Comic Annual is also excellent in its way. In fact, all of them will furnish entertaining reading for the long Winter evenings that are now upon us; and as none of our own publishers has given us a New-York Christmas Annual, we must be duly grateful to BRENTANO for bringing over these.

Fatal Accident at a Shooting Match.

From the Toronto Leader, Jan. 2.

A fatal accident occurred yesterday afternoon at a shooting match at Mr. MCFARLANE's hotel, some six miles from the city. Yesterday forenoon a party of sportsmen left this city to engage in a turkey shooting match, Mr. CALEB GILES, of Windsor-street, being of the number, and several parties from the country met them and engaged in the match about noon. When the last turkey was killed, it being about 4:45 o'clock, a few of the company remained on the ground to see the bird brought up to the place of shooting, and while standing in a group the report of a rifle was heard and Mr. GILES fell to the ground fatally injured. It was then ascertained that a rifle resting on the shoulder of Mr. JOHN SHEPPARD, a resident of the plank road, near Vaughan, had unaccountably gone off, and shot the deceased. Mr. SHEPPARD was standing at the time with his back toward Mr. GILES. An examination showed that the ball had entered a little above the left ear and had gone out at the top of the head. The injured man was of course carried into the hotel, and all that could possibly be done for him was promptly performed. In the meantime, Dr. ARMSTRONG, of York Mills, was sent for, but when he examined the wound he pronounced Mr. GILES fatally injured. He died about 7 o'clock in the evening.

The deceased was one of the most warm-hearted sportsmen in Toronto, and his loss will be deeply and generally deplored by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. He was an active member of the Toronto Rifle Club, and was ever ready to promote its interests in the most generous manner.

AUDUBON'S BIOGRAPHY.

The announcement, some days since, of the appearance in England of AUDUBON's biography made up from his papers, at a superficial glance, filled us with expected pleasure. But our enthusiasm was soon weakened when we read that the printed volume contained only about one-fifth of the matter included in the manuscript! It is not usual to complain in these days of literary works being too brief, but by what authority or for what reason should the matter furnished by AUDUBON to the amount of four large printed volumes, relating to the early history of the South and West, be thrown aside by his biographer?

AUDUBON commenced his labors of observation of the Western country as early as 1808, in which year he made his bridal tour with his accomplished wife in a flatboat, from Pittsburg to Louisville. And for more than a half century he employed his picturesque pen in noting incidents and making history, independent of his immediate pursuits as an ornithologist.

AUDUBON has had no superior in graphic descriptions of frontier life; at least, we might say all that he has written, is of immense value, either for detailed information, or for suggesting hints that lead to correct conclusions. We cannot understand why Mr. AUDUBON's family put AUDUBON's papers in the hands of Mr. BUCHANAN, a Scotch poet. What could he know of the country that AUDUBON so industriously threaded; how could he appreciate the nameless little incidents that AUDUBON has recorded, which, to the educated American, would be invaluable, but which, to Mr. BUCHANAN, would be nonsense indeed. A great misfortune it will be, if the material for "four volumes of printed matter" has been destroyed; if not, let our publishers vie for the purchase of it; and, let our written history be enriched by all that AUDUBON has put on paper; less than this will be doing injustice to one of the most original minds our country has ever produced.

We perceive that Mr. BUCHANAN, with most unpardonable evidence of his want of appreciation of AUDUBON's true character, pronounces AUDUBON a queer compound of Actæon and Narcissus, holding a gun in one hand and a looking-glass in another; and that this most unjust epitome of character is persisted in, even after Mrs. AUDUBON desired that it be left out, as unjust to her husband's memory, and as particularly unnecessary to be mentioned by her husband's chosen biographer. Mr. BUCHANAN, with a singular want of gallantry which is only equaled by his evident inability to thoroughly appreciate AUDUBON's character, reiterates the offensive criticism in the preface to his work. It is a matter of little and great moment this offensive allusion to the naturalist's personal peculiarities. History presents many men of truly great minds, who have been possessed by vanity; but it is a defect in the character, and has been so always understood. If it were true of AUDUBON, it was not the business of his biographer to mention it; if it is untrue, as it unquestionably is, then it displays a want of that just discrimination which should characterize the biographer.

When we first arrived in Louisiana more than thirty years ago, we were pleasantly surprised to find that our temporary home was within range of much of AUDUBON's most faithfully searched country. Almost every old resident we met could tell us something about the man; and although we heard much to satisfy us that his pursuits were altogether unappreciated, yet we never heard anything that did not reflect honor on his character as an enthusiastic disciple of nature, and a

THE MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Their Value—The Weakness of the Country they Protect—The Defects in the Present Levee System.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The Mississippi, from the mouth of Red River to New-Orleans, concentrates within its comparatively narrow banks the water drained from nearly two-thirds of the North American continent, affording 25,000 miles of navigable streams. The Red River, which is one of the most important tributaries of the Mississippi, is 2,500 miles long, and drains a country larger and infinitely more fertile than Egypt. It is on the banks of the Red River, and its innumerable tributaries lying within the State of Louisiana, and upon the banks of the Mississippi, from the mouth of Red River to some forty miles below New-Orleans, that within the last half century has been established what is known as the "Louisiana Levee System."

The necessity of these embankments grows out of the fact that the shores which line these rivers within the State of Louisiana are annually subject to overflow. Aside from this objection, no country on the globe presents so many advantages for the happiness of man.

And within a few years, under the auspices of free labor, it will undoubtedly be the garden spot of the world, for the soil is inexhaustible, the climate is mild without being enervating, and the expenses of dwellings, clothing and living are merely nominal, compared with the demands made in the colder regions of the North. In fact, free labor has never before had such an Eden for the display of its thrift, enterprise and consequent material happiness.

The highest point on the banks of the rivers we have alluded to, within the "levee district," is at the shore line, and the land descends as you go inland about four inches to the mile. In the highest stage of the flood, which is designated the "Spring rise," the water would, if not obstructed, rise from two to five feet above the natural embankment, and rush with great velocity into the swamps. To avoid this catastrophe there is erected along the river front what is called the "levee." When one is built it is usual to place the foundations about thirty or forty yards from the face of the natural bank. The laborers throw up dirt from the outside, and vary the height of the levee from five to fifteen feet, according to the demand.

The levee pursues a zigzag course, for being too weak to give direction, it has to yield to the caprices of the current. If the bank on which the levee has been built threatens to "cave in," another levee is built in the rear. If a "cut off" occurs and changes the current of the river, then the levee in the vicinity is moved to the "front," so as to include what would otherwise be waste land. No permanency, indeed, is to be relied upon for the levee line. Houses that once stood two miles from the river bank, have, in time, "toppled into the surging waves of the Mississippi;" and houses again that were built near the bank, have had acres deposited in front of them.

As much as the river may change in its restless bed, it never alters its average width or sameness of appearance. What is engulfed by the swiftly rushing waters "in the bend" is thrown up on the opposite shore as the obtruding "point," and thus the Mississippi, ever changing, is eternally the same.

New-Orleans, poetically denominated the "Crescent City," is built on one of these graceful bends, yet just below, fortunately for its protection, is a "point." McDONOUGH, once the millionaire of New-Orleans, lived opposite the city, and his "home estate" was constantly caving in, and he observed with a miser's sorrow that the exact amount of land he lost came up in city lots on the opposite side of the river. It was suggested by a very acute surveyor that Mr. McDONOUGH have the latitude and longitude of his place taken and officially recorded, and then have the latitude and longitude of the opposite or city side of the river taken and officially recorded, and by this means he could establish a legal claim against New-Orleans and get well paid for the losses he sustained by his runaway land.

When the levees were first constructed, they were unimportant in their influence on the current of the river, but when cotton and sugar became the profitable agricultural productions of the country, plantations were rapidly opened, and of a necessity lands more and more "under high-water mark," were brought into cultivation, and the river itself was constantly brought within newly-constructed embankments; and thus it was, that, at the breaking out of the rebellion, the levees in Louisiana extended along both sides of the river to the Arkansas and Mississippi State levees, and reached far up Red River, and had interlacing levees on innumerable tributary streams.

By law, every planter was obliged to keep up the levee in front of his plantation, and when a "crevasse" was threatened or occurred, every negro laborer in the district affected was hurried from the plantations, and by superhuman efforts, and by the most ill-directed industry possible, the damages was as much as possible avoided.

For years before the levee system was destroyed by the efforts of the rebels to drown out the Federal forces operating against Vicksburg and Port Hudson, it was admitted by intelligent planters and good observers, that Louisiana was settled a century too soon, which meant that in another hundred years, if left undisturbed, by the annual deposits of the river, would have raised its banks to a level with the highest point of elevation. It was also admitted that more land was included within the protection of levees than could be securely held, for annually, the river broke through some point or another, and thus relieved itself from a general devastation of the country.

We have shown the value of the levees—spoken of the richness of the country they protect, and the manner they are built, and the suggestion crowds itself upon the mind, that accident and not design has devised the "system," and that it was imperfect in its operation, and had reached that point even before the rebellion, which would have compelled the planters to entirely change the manner of protecting themselves from overflow.

Under free labor, the imperative law of slavery, that called together the hosts of Egypt, or of Louisiana, to sweat and toil unpaid on the public works, has ended. The levees must hereafter be built on scientific principles, and instead of large tracts of country being dependent, only small districts must be liable to waste from the accident of an overflow. The system of stopping up the natural outlets of the Mississippi, below the mouth of Red River, must be abandoned, and every bayou that led off the impending flood must be a gateway to carry the surging tide harmlessly to the Gulf.

There is nothing necessarily difficult in the problem of securing the lower Mississippi, the garden spot of the world, from its annual overflow. Providence has given intelligence to man to meet the difficulties, but if is man, free in the enjoyment of his intellect and resources, and a free, intelligent population, with small farms, and the consequent strength of a dense agricultural population will soon devise the way and command the resources that will secure lower Louisiana from all possible danger of an overflow.

A levee must protect a population united by mutual interests, and of the most friendly personal relations. The individual, however rich or however poor, is uninterested, and the levee, under any circumstances, requires constant supervision. An immense quantity of water finds its way through the best-constructed levee, from the softness of the soil, or holes made by cray or craw fishes. Several years are necessary to really make a levee firm, and free from injury from rain. Levees must be continually watched, and there must be that friendly relationship that will secure the help of all when danger threatens. A malicious person in a few moments, without possible fear of detection, can submerge an entire district of country in his desire to injure an obnoxious individual.

Louisiana, through her Senators in Congress, is urging her claims for money to build these levees. She asks of Congress millions of dollars to carry on a work of State importance, when the same Congress begrudgingly appropriates a few thousands to remove the obstructions to national commerce that finds its way through the rocky pass of Hell Gate.

A loyal population can alone sustain a levee system which must now be erected on principles suited to free labor. If Congress had money to unconstitutionally appropriate to local enterprises it would be worse than useless to attempt under the present state of things in Louisiana to do anything for the levees of that State. Gen. GRANT has struck the key-note in his reply to United States Senator, Judge KELLOGG, and his friends from Louisiana, as reported in the St. Louis Democrat of the 30th ult., when he said:

"Let them [the plantations] overflow, and let them stay under water until their owners are willing that Northern men and Northern capital should come in and protect and improve them. Northern men, with ample capital, are ready to make a garden of your State, and you won't let them do it. Your large landholders are as hostile to the United States Government to-day as they have ever been, and if that Government should rebuild their levees it would not change them a particle. I know no way the Government could have adopted for rebuilding the levees but to have confiscated the lands of those engaged in rebellion, and used the proceeds to restore the country. As that was not done, nothing remains but to set your negroes to work and invite in and welcome Northern men."

Why, indeed, should Congress appropriate money to protect men who defy the laws and hate the Government? Why should communities be enriched by the very hospitality that is spit upon and defied? The very paper that contains the account of Gen. GRANT's decision has the following:

NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 31.—The editor of the Marksville Register, who is also the Clerk of the Seventh Judicial District Court, reports the total destruction of his office by a mob led on by the editor of the Marksville Villager, a Democratic journal published at the same place.

The men employed in this outrage live under the protection of the levee that a loyal Republican Congress is asked to build.

EX-GOV. MOREHEAD.

How He Restocked His Plantation After the War—Particulars of His Sudden Death.

From the New-Orleans Times, Dec. 29.

The death of Ex-Gov. CHARLES S. MOREHEAD, which occurred on his plantation, on Deer Creek, just a week ago, was one of startling suddenness.

A few days before the Ex-Governor was in this city, when we had the pleasure of a most agreeable interview and conversation with him. The war had stripped him of a splendid estate—a large plantation and of many slaves. Besides, he had suffered many hardships and humiliations during that sorrowful era, had been arrested, imprisoned and exiled. An ardent Southerner, he warmly espoused the rebellion, and by his pen and tongue, and by his influence, was regarded a formidable champion of that cause. When the war closed his slaves were all emancipated, his plantation was a desert, and the bare land was not sufficient to satisfy a debt which, at the time it was incurred, was a mere trifle. Undismayed and unshaken by these great disasters, the Ex-Governor, though advanced in years, set to work with the zeal and ardor of a youth, and genuine temperament to resuscitate his prostrate fortunes.

Surrendering his estate and all his other property to his creditors, he engaged in the practice of law in Mississippi. At the same time the purchaser of his plantation insisted upon his leasing and cultivating it, only demanding for rent that it should be fenced at the Governor's expense. Drawing around him his old slaves, he asked them if they were willing to go to work and hitch teams with him, and try and see if they couldn't pull through the deep slough in which the war had left them. "Yaas, Massa," was the reply of the faithful negroes, "you were good to us when you were able, and we'll stick by you now."

And so the good and reliable of his old gang returned to the old home and went to work. But other instrumentalities were needed to cultivate a plantation beside hands. Horses, mules, plows, hoes, stock, hogs, and a great many other things were necessary. How could these be raised? Money could not be borrowed in Mississippi, nor in New-Orleans, at that time, on the contingent security of a cotton crop. The Governor was not much of a financier, but he was an excellent lawyer, and had already drawn around him a promising clientelle. He had been successful in several important cases. His clients, however, were, like him, without money; he had charged up a good list of fees, which it was pleasant and encouraging to look at and contemplate, but not profitable or conducive to the great object he had in view of putting his plantation in working order. The idea then occurred to him, as his clients were all planters, to collect his fees in stock and in such articles as were required for his plantation. He was gratified to find the proposition cordially and generously met by his clients. Some gave him mules, some horses and hogs, and others even furnished his house with their spare furniture, and in a little while the Governor found himself quite comfortable and able to put in a crop. With thirty mules, all realized by his collections, and horses, and hogs, and agricultural implements, and by the devoted labor and thrift of his negroes, he managed this season to raise a good cotton crop, which had been safely gathered, seeded, and packed in his gin-house, the value of which was about $15,000. Under these encouraging circumstances he visited the city some eight or ten days ago, and called on his old friends, who were delighted by the hilarity, hopefulness, and prosperous circumstances of the "fine old Kentucky gentleman." His prospects, he declared, were never more cheering, and he felt as if he had taken a new lease of life, and in a short time confidently expected to be better off than he ever was. In this state of feeling he returned to his plantation, when his death occurred in the manner already related. The burning of his gin, with the product of so much of effort, sacrifice and struggle, was a shock too great for his overworked mind. Though in apparent excellent health, when he saw the certain destruction of the fruits of his labor, he fell to the earth senseless, and when found by his faithful negroes he was a corpse.

The Slight to Mr. Reverdy Johnson.

To the Editor of the London Times:

SIR: My name having been most unpleasantly and unfairly prominent in connection with the above disgraceful business, will you kindly allow me to place the facts before your readers? I plead guilty to having proposed that a workingman's dinner to Mr. JOHNSON should be given. I did so for the following reasons: I had just been treated with extreme kindness by men of all classes in America, and wished to do anything which lay in my power to show some gratitude. I had been kindly treated because I was in some sort a representative of English workmen, and what, therefore, was more natural than that I should suggest, as the American Minister was receiving invitations from all parts of the country, that he should be invited to meet a number of workingmen. I also thought from what I had witnessed in the United States that a friendly message from a meeting of workingmen would be more acceptable there for various reasons than any number of good wishes from men in the higher ranks of English society. I mentioned the matter to the men—a few of whose names I inclose for publication or not, as you think fit—and at their request I invited Mr. JOHNSON, who, thinking with me, that a few kindly words spoken to his countrymen by workmen here would have a good effect, most cordially accepted the invitation.

Everything was arranged, the date fixed, an address to Mr. JOHNSON fully discussed and agreed upon, and a number of tickets sold, when my gentlemen who are in the habit of giving private advice to prominent workingmen pointed out to some of my friends that they had made a mistake in electing me as their chairman, because four years ago I had written some letters which they did not approve to the editor of the Times. Although I had been voted to the chair with only one dissentient, after the merits of three candidates had been freely discussed, I told our Secretary, who showed me one of the letters he received, that I thought his correspondents were no better than old women, but would myself propose that Mr. ODGER should preside to prevent any unpleasantness. I did so, and he was accepted. The men who had thus privately driven me from the chair now directed that our meetings should be held at the Reform League, at least I am so entitled to believe, for in spite of my recommendation in favor of another address—No. 150 Strand—which was placed at our disposal, and was in every way a more suitable place, the members of our committee, who are in frequent correspondence with their middle-class advisers, made such a determined opposition that I and my more immediate friends waived the matter, and to the Reform League office we went. Here Mr. BEALES appeared on the scene—I may be misinformed, but, as far as I know, uninvited. He walked up and down among us while we were waiting for Mr. ODGER's arrival, in a manner which made me think he was embarrassed, and to set him at his ease I said: "Gentlemen, as Mr. BEALES has honored us with his presence, I think he should be invited to take the chair to-night." Mr. BEALES did take the chair, and—I trust he will excuse me for saying—in a most friendly set of his completed the disorganization which the private letters of his friends had already introduced into our committee. When Mr. ODGER had presided the week before he had shown great tact in regulating the discussion—Mr. BEALES exhibited none. Members of the Reform League were allowed to say all sorts of silly things, while the chairman sat as grave and patient as if they were talking sense, and, to crown the matter, although he was two or three times reminded that the Press was represented, he delivered a solemn speech in which the only point which I could detect was that the workingmen of London, whose real representative he (the chairman) was, would do well to cautiously weigh the matter before they conveyed any compliment to Americans through a "tainted medium"—i. e., the American Minister, who had honored us by accepting our invitation. A foreign gentleman who was present, and called himself "Citizen Something," said he represented some international body of workmen who were of opinion that Mr. JOHNSON was unworthy to meet them; and—in spite of the substance of your leading article being again and again repeated in argument by myself and others—the members of the Reform League and the foreign gentlemen either could or would not see that there was anything for it but to insult our expected guest. The reports of this meeting had the effect of disgusting every decent man on the committee, and I was on every hand advised to withdraw at once. Feeling, however, that if Mr. JOHNSON was to be communicated with it had better be done by men who would at least be certain not to go down and shake their fists in his face, I attended one more meeting of the committee, and made one more appeal to the gentlemanly feeling of the minority. It failed, and, not thinking the matter would become so public, I endeavored to put it in the mildest form consistent with truth, and, if possible, screen even those whose want of decency and want of sense had made them unable to screen themselves. Hence my letter to Mr. JOHNSON and his reply, which have excited so much comment. The insult has arisen from the backstairs interference of well-meaning men, who, without the responsibility of publicity, direct the tremendous power of trades' union. They worried Mr. ROEBUCK out of Sheffield, although I think he richly deserved it; they have passed a slight upon Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON, who certainly does not. As for the Reform League, the uneasiness which that body has given a certain class of Englishmen has caused much amusement among those who have all along known the amount of their influence over workingmen. We were perfectly able to hold our meeting, and have our dinner to Mr. JOHNSON, but we were not able to insure him against possible annoyance from some of the gentlemen who meet weekly to decide upon the policy of Great Britain.

I am, Sir, yours, &c., ROBERT CONINGSBY.

Death of an Old Resident of Detroit.

From the Detroit Post, Dec. 29.

The widow of Major HENRY B. BREVOORT died at her residence, in this city, on Saturday evening, aged 86 years. CATHARINE NAVARRE BREVOORT was the daughter of ROBERT NAVARRE, the widow of Major HENRY B. BREVOORT, and the mother of JOHN V. BREVOORT, Esq., and Mrs. CHARLES L. BRISTOL, of this city, and ELIAS BREVOORT, of New-Mexico. She was born, was married and has died in the same house, now over a century old, the present residence of Mr. BRISTOL. His ancestors were officers under the French, when that Government first established a colony at Detroit, and were the lineal decendants of HENRY IV. of France. She has spent a long life in this community; has seen strange changes in Government and society, and almost three generations have passed away during her life. Her near relative, Gen. ALEXANDER MACOMB, was a soldier, whose name is inseparably connected with the history of the United States; her father was one of the pioneers of this country, and husband, children and friends of United States army—passed a long and eventful life in the service, among other things participating in PERRY's victory, as a volunteer, in command of the marines. In the death of this estimable lady, the past has lost a representative among us, and the present a tie which seemed to bind us to the days gone by, in which our immediate ancestors lived. Her remains will be deposited in Elmwood, by the side of her husband, in accordance with her own most earnest request just before her death.

A Singular Accident in Manchester.

From the Manchester (N. H.) Mirror, Jan. 2.

At about 1 o'clock last night, a fire was discovered in a building on the back street between Hanover and Amherst streets, belonging to ISAAC RIDDLE. The watchman went to the spot, and found that a table and some bedding had been on fire, and the side of the room considerably smoked. A child, only a week old, was found burned on the arm and neck. The fire was extinguished without giving an alarm. The facts appear to be, that a woman by the name of SULLIVAN is the mother of the child. She was only temporarily there; but the child, which had not been very stout, died, as it is said, about bedtime last night, and was laid out on a table, and surrounded with burning candles, after the custom of Catholics. In the night, when all were asleep, the candles burned down, set fire to the pillow and clothing, and burned the dead body.

Peaceful Condition of South Carolina.

From the Charleston News, Jan. 1.

South Carolina, the so-called "cradle of the rebellion," is, on this New-Year's Day, 1869, the most peaceful and secure of all the Southern States. We have a colored population of 400,000 and a white population of 275,000 or less; but order and quiet reign within our borders, and no such thing as widespread riot or tumult has been known in this State. It is not that we have been free from the exciting causes of trouble and disaffection. Political firebrands and itinerant thieves have been as plenteous here as elsewhere, but the steady good sense of white men and colored men labor soberly side by side, and the business of the whole State is in a healthy and thriving condition.
